'Refugee' claim refuted by court

OTTAWA — A decision released last week by the Federal Court of Canada rejecting a Russian couple's claims of persecution in Israel could help cool a long-simmering dispute between Canada and Israel.

The court upheld a decision by the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) to reject the refugee claim of Mickael and Tatyana Frid and their daughter Alice, who had argued that as technical "non-Jews" in Israel, they faced persecution.

The Frids immigrated to Israel from Kazakhstan in February 1992 under the Law of Return, which guarantees Israeli citizenship to anyone who can prove they had at least one Jewish grandparent.

But because Mickael Frid's mother was not Jewish, he fell into the category of "half-Jews" (those with a Jewish father and non-Jewish mother), while his daughter Alice was a "non-Jew" (someone whose parents are not Jewish but has at least one Jewish grandparent).

Frid told the IRB, and later the Federal Court, that his family faced persecution and harassment because of their mixed status. He said he could not get work and his wife was attacked by Israeli police officers.

But Justice Marshall Rothstein, in a ruling made Dec. 13 in Calgary but released last week, said he could find no evidence of state complicity in denying Frid a chance to work.

Rothstein noted that the IRB took into account the Frids' claims, but correctly concluded that discrimination – if there was any – did not amount to persecution.

The court agreed with the IRB's findings that "there is no evidence that [the Israeli government is] persecuting those persons who they have invited to come to their country."

Frid had also argued that as a conscientious objector, he faced a prison term for refusing compulsory military service.

But Rothstein said that the punishment in Israel for refusing military service, which ranges from one week to one year, does not constitute persecution.

"There is nothing in the material pointed out to me that suggests [the IRB's findings] should be interfered with by this court," Rothstein wrote.

Editorial — The Dreyfus Affair

One hundred years ago today, the conviction of Captain Alfred Dreyfus on false charges of treason culminated in his public humiliation in an official military ceremony of degradation.

It was Saturday morning, the Sabbath, on a day described by one correspondent as "glacial, beneath a wintry sky, and an acrid and lashing wind". From his perch on horseback at the centre of the courtyard, General Paul Darras, the presiding officer, glowered contemptuously at the prisoner who stood at attention a few metres away. After the clerk of the court-martial read the verdict which had been reached a fortnight earlier, the general rose in his stirrups and with sword held high proclaimed: "Alfred Dreyfus, you are no longer worthy of bearing arms. In the name of the people of France, we dishonor you."

With that verbal expectoration, the ritual began. It lasted only a few minutes. But like a heavy stone cast into an ice clear pool, it sent ripples of shock and dismay into the Jewish community around the world.

It is an anniversary we believe to be noteworthy. We have therefore assembled three pieces on the "Affair".

See Perspectives Page 9

Arnold Ages provides a brief history of the event and Sheldon Kirshner writes about its fallout. We have also reproduced the story of the degradation filed by Theodore Herzl on that date for the Neue Freie Presse in Vienna.

The treatment of Dreyfus and the response of the French public are widely held to have been instrumental in thrusting him to the forefront of the Zionist cause.

Indeed, the publicity generated by the journalists, such as Herzl and later Emile Zola, played a prominent role in determining Dreyfus' destiny. This is a key aspect of the "Affair": the emerging power of the press.

But of course, the central feature of the "Affair" was the paradoxical and illogical grip of popular anti-Semitism. At the turn of the century, France was a modern, mostly secular, parliamentary democracy. It had been the first country to grant emancipation to its Jewish community. It stood for values of universal fraternity and equality. And yet even there, so many people actually shouted "Death to the Jews".

The importance of the "Affair" surpassed its circumstances. Dreyfus did not consider the injustices he suffered to be related to the religion which he refused to practise. History though, proved the captain to be wrong.

CANADA

CJF Canadian Reps

NEW YORK — Sheila Engel and George Wasserstein, both of Toronto, have been re-elected to the 1995 Council of Jewish Federations' executive committee as Canadian representatives.

The council, established in 1932, is the continental association of 189 Jewish federations serving nearly 800 cities and towns and over six million Jews in Canada and the United States.

Canadians Chosen

WYNCOTE, PA — Two Canadians were elected to the board of directors of the Federation of Reconstructionist Congregations and Havurot at the federation's recent annual convention held in Dana Point, Calif.

Edna Edelberg, a member of Congregation Dorshei Emet in Montreal, was elected regional vice-president for Canada. Phyllis Angel Greenberg of Congregation Darchei Noam in Toronto was chosen as a member-at-large. Both women will serve two-year terms.

Chisvin Elected

TORONTO — Jack Chisvin, a former president of the Toronto chapter of the Canadian Technion Society (CTS), was recently elected national president of the organization.

He replaces Sydney Cooper of Toronto, who becomes chairman of the board. Morley Blankstein of Winnipeg, former chairman of the board, becomes honorary vice-chairman. Arnold Recht of Toronto is the new senior vice-chairman. His successor as chair of the Toronto chapter is Richard Cooper.

Chisvin, a 68-year-old engineer, is also a former president of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

Aronovitch to Continue

WINNIPEG — Donald Aronovitch was elected to a second term as president of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council at the organization's recent annual meeting.

Jonathan Kroft was elected to another term as senior vice president.

Letter to Chretien

OTTAWA — The Canadian Council of Churches and Canadian Jewish Congress have united in expressing concern to Prime Minister Jean Chretien over what the groups call the "deterioriating public mood" with respect to immigration and refugees.

The joint letter was endorsed by 14 other church and Jewish leaders.

The letter to Chretien claims that "it is almost impossible for refugees to get a visa from a Canadian immigration officer overseas, even when their lives are in danger."

ISRAEL

PLO Banned

JERUSALEM — The Knesset has overwhelmingly adopted a law officially banning PLO activities in Jerusalem.

The legislation prohibits official PLO activities in all of Israel, but in practical terms pertains primarily to Orient House, where the PLO maintains its eastern Jerusalem headquarters.

Police Minister Moshe Shahal said the law will make it possible for Israel to act against illegal Palestinian activity in eastern Jerusalem.

Israel in Arab League?

JERUSALEM — A proposal by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres that Israel be accepted into the Arab League has received a less than enthusiastic response from the organization.

Last month, Peres said that changing the nature of the association to include all countries of the Middle East would be appropriate in an era of peace.

In Cairo, an Arab League spokesman said Israel is welcome to submit a formal request for membership if it feels it meets the requirements — "the first of which is being an Arab state."

Rabin in Oman

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin last month visited Oman, becoming the first Israeli leader to visit the Arab Gulf nation.

Upon his return, Rabin said the two countries hope to establish formal diplomatic ties in the near future.

Rabin met with Omani leader Sultan Qaboos Bin Said to discuss the Mideast peace process.

At the request of the Omani hosts, Rabin's one-day visit was not made public until its conclusion.

Artifacts Handed Over

JERUSALEM — Some 800 cartons of pottery, flints, textiles, jewelry, and coins uncovered by Israeli archeologists in Sinai were handed over to Egyptian representatives last week, marking the first such return of artifacts by one country to another.

"We in Egypt appreciate and will continue to appreciate what you did," Prof. Abd Halim Nour Din, director of Egypt's Supreme Archeological Council, told Amir Drori, director of the Antiquities Authority, at a ceremony at the Rockefeller Museum in Jerusalem.

The Antiquities Authority has applied to the Egyptian government to receive on loan 24 Sinai objects containing Hebrew inscriptions. Din said Egypt is ready to consider requests for loans, but has never given any objects for a long period of time.

Drori said it took so long to return the artifacts, which were uncovered between 1968 and 1980, because they had to be sorted, catalogued, and, in many cases, restored.

Burg to Run

JERUSALEM — Labor MK Avraham Burg last week announced his candidacy for the chairmanship of the Jewish Agency.

Acting Chairman Yehiel Leket is also in the running.

The term of suspended chairman Simcha Dinitz, who is on trial in Jerusalem District Court on fraud charges, ended Dec. 31.

Leket is generally viewed as Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's candidate, while Burg is perceived as having the support of Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

Children in Poverty

JERUSALEM — One out of every five Israeli children, or about 470,000 youngsters, lived below the poverty line last year, according to a report released recently by the National Council for the Welfare of the Child.

The council said the highest rates of poverty among children were found in Jerusalem and Bnei Brak, near Tel Aviv. Both areas are home to large concentrations of Orthodox families.

The report conflicted with numbers in another report released in November by the National Insurance Institute.

According to that report, an estimated 279,000 Israeli children were living in poverty. Overall, 12 per cent of Israel's population, or some 648,000 Israelis, lived below the poverty line in 1993, according to the institute's figures.

WORLD

Neo-Nazi Arrested

ROME — Italy's leading neo-Nazi has been arrested in connection with a violent melee involving right-wing militants at a soccer game in the northern city of Brescia.

Rival fans clashed at a Nov. 20 soccer match between Rome and Brescia. A policeman was stabbed during one of the incidents.

Maurizio Boccacci, 37, was arrested along with nine other right-wing extremists.

Boccacci, a self-proclaimed racist and anti-Semite, was the leader of a neo-Nazi style group called Political Movement, which was banned last year.

Anti-Semitism Down Under

SYDNEY — Anti-Semitic incidents have increased throughout Australia during the past year, as have the activities of Australian racist groups, according to reports presented recently to the Executive Council of Australian Jewry.

The ECAJ, which maintains a central database of reported anti-Semitic incidents in Australia, recorded a seven per cent increase over the previous year in all types of such incidents from Nov. 1, 1993, to Oct. 31, 1994.

The council noted, however, that there was an 18 per cent decrease in reports of violent anti-Semitic incidents.

The ECAJ reported a nearly 60 per cent increase in reports of intimidation and hate mail during the past year, with Holocaust-denial materials being mailed to Holocaust survivors a prominent development.

Quebec MP Berger resigns seat

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — David Berger has announced his resignation as member of Parliament for the Montreal-area riding of St. Henri-Westmount, effective immediately.

Berger, among just a handful of Jewish MPs, admitted it was difficult to give up his seat to enable former Quebec cabinet minister Lucienne Robillard to run.

"I loved it," Berger said of his over 15 years in the House of Commons. He was first elected at age 28 in now-defunct Laurier and has represented St. Henri-Westmount, since 1988.

"I believe I faithfully and honestly served my constituency ... But the prime minister suggested there were other ways I could make a contribution," he said.

Berger will begin a new job in the Prime Minister's Office this month as an adviser on small business financing. "I always had plans for a second or even third career," he said. "Jean Chretien has simply advanced that."

David Berger

Andre Ouellet, minister responsible for Quebec, said the Liberal Party appreciates Berger's contribution, but as a francophone and former senior Liberal Quebec cabinet minister, Robillard should be a major asset in the coming Quebec referendum campaign.

Robillard, who was health minister in the government of former Quebec Premier Daniel Johnson, is expected to be nominated by acclamation at the Jan. 11 riding convention. The byelection will be held on Feb. 13.

Ouellet said Robillard would be an effective spokeswoman for the No forces in rural and other regions outside Montreal where most seats are held by the Bloc Quebecois. Her jump to federal politics should also help cement relations between the provincial and federal Liberals as they prepare a common front against the sovereigntists, he said.

Berger vowed to take an active role in the referendum. "I'm not going to disappear into the woodwork."

Being an anglophone did not prevent him from representing francophone Quebecers in the past, he said, noting that the old riding of Laurier was about two-thirds French and St. Henri-Westmount about half.

Plans to write about Canada, federalism

He'd like to do some writing about Canada and federalism to answer the separatists, he said.

Berger, who has a young family, will live in Ottawa, and keep an address in Quebec — his country home in the Eastern Townships.

He was working for the old Alouettes football club, which was owned by his late father Sam Berger, when he entered politics.

In the 1992 referendum on the Constitution, Berger appeared inconsistent. He first said he was opposed to the Charlottetown agreement and the next day announced that he was actually in favor of it and thus, in agreement with his party's position.

Before the 1993 election, members of the St. Henri-Westmount riding association openly called for Berger to step aside to enable former federal cabinet minister Donald Johnston to run. Berger's candidacy was assured only after Chretien intervened.

Current riding association president Simon Potter emphasized that the executive and board of directors were unanimous in their support of the party's decision to ask Berger to resign in favor of Robillard, but at the same time expressed gratitude for Berger's service.

Robillard, a social worker, worked as a youth leader on a kibbutz in Israel from 1969-72 and still delights Jewish audiences with her fluent Hebrew.

Berger said he looks forward to working in the Prime Minister's Office, where he expects to be involved with shaping economic policy.

Ouellet praised Berger for his "vision and understanding.

"It shows the value of the individual when he does not allow selfish reasons to prevail over the common objective," Ouellet said.

Berger's departure leaves three Jewish MPs in the House of Commons, all Liberals: Herb Gray, Sheila Finestone and Barry Campbell.

CJC, police develop new protocol to deal with dangerous situations

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Metro Toronto police and officials of Canadian Jewish Congress have worked out a new protocol for situations in which Canadian Jews may be in danger from anti-Semitic extremists.

The consensus was reached in the wake of a report by the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) that described a plan by an "unstable" member of the Heritage Front to march into the Lipa Green Building that houses Jewish community offices and "take out" those present.

The SIRC report also disclosed that Bernie Farber, director of community relations for Congress, was considered public enemy number 1 by members of the Heritage Front and that the white supremacist organization considered assasinating Jewish leaders to take the heat off the organization.

Farber said he and Congress officials Louis Lenkinski and Manuel Prutschi met with Det. Sgt. Wayne Cotgreave of the Metro Police hate crimes unit to voice their concern that potential victims weren't informed of the plot.

Cotgreave repeated an earlier explanation that the proponent of the plot was under arrest for two weeks and even after his release, police did not feel he posed a serious threat.

"That's not good enough," Farber said. Congress believes it should have been told of the threat so it could take security measures.

"We now have agreed upon a protocol on dealing with these issues in the future. I can't deal with the specifics for security reasons," Farber said.

"I am satisfied with how the matter ended and look forward to a good relationship with the Metro police," he added.

Cotgreave was unavailable for comment.

Winnipeg gay/lesbian group getting community exposure

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — After nearly four years since its formation, Chutzpah, Winnipeg's first group for gay and lesbian Jews, is becoming known in the wider Jewish community.

In late September, Chutzpah was invited to lead a workshop on sexual orientation at a community program held by Jewish women's groups.

And this fall some members were interviewed for the first time on the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council's monthly SundayScope cable TV program.

"We have had a lot of positive response," said Karen Luks, a Chutzpah member originally from the Montreal area. "We have also been invited to an Oneg Shabbat at Temple Shalom [the city's Reform synagogue]. The community has surprised us by its support. It has shown us that we were wrong to think we had to choose between being Jewish and being gay or lesbian."

Marc Waterman, a founding member of Chutzpah, said there has been no acknowlegment of gay and lesbian Jews in the community until now.

Waterman said Chutzpah grew from a meeting he had with a Jewish friend when they were both just beginning to come out.

"We realized we needed a group like Chutzpah and put up some posters," he said. "We had 20 people at that first meeting. I was shocked at how many gay and lesbian Jews there were in Winnipeg. I had never heard of any while I was growing up. That is why it is so important for us to come out and be more visible in the wider Jewish community. We want to let other gay and lesbian Jews know they are not alone."

Luks observed that there are very few older gay Jews in Winnipeg because the majority felt they had to leave to find a community.

Human rights issue

Waterman said he initially felt he had to distance himself from the Jewish community partially to protect his family, but also to find his own space to explore.

"Winnipeg is still a small town in a lot of ways and the Jewish community is a small town within a small town," he said.

Dovid Waldman, another Chutzpah member, said the door is opening to gay and lesbian Jewish members of the Winnipeg Jewish community — despite continued religious opposition to homosexuality.

"We see this as a human rights issue," he said. "I have always believed in the progressive nature of most Jewish Canadians."

Luks however is mildly critical of the wider Jewish community. "The community has not been in the forefront in dealing with this issue," she said. "Many still hold narrow views."

Both Luks and Waterman talked about the central role of the family in Judaism, saying they feel the definition of the family is too narrow.

Chutzpah now has about 30 members who span a wide age range. The group's structure is still informal; they get together for Chanukah and Purim parties and Pesach seders (they have written their own hagadah), and for social evenings and educational programs.

"Not all Chutzpah members share the same goals," Luks said. "Some are more interested in the social aspects, while to others it is more important to make contact with the wider Jewish community."

Like all Jews, Chutzpah members are fighting the tendency towards assimilation, and they face anti-Semitism at times from other gays and lesbians.

"We have never turned down an invitation from the wider Jewish community to speak to them," said Luks. "A true dialogue however has to involve two sides coming together on equal terms. We are a small group with limited resources. We will be happy to have community groups invite us though."

Hadassah conference planned

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — The ninth annual congress of Hadassah International, which operates in 36 countries on four continents, will be held in Montreal April 30 to May 3.

The announcement of the congress was made by Judy Mandleman, national president of Canadian Hadassah-WIZO.

Organized 10 years ago, Hadassah International is directly affiliated with Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem and, Mandelman said, "fosters special relationships between Hadassah Hospital ... and scientific institutions wherever Hadassah International has a presence."

Hadassah Hospital, with two sites in Jerusalem, has 934 beds plus outreach services.

In many of the countries where Hadassah International has been established, it competes with other Hadassah groups. However, Canadian Hadassah-WIZO affiliated with Hadassah International in 1990 to help fund cancer research through the Moshe Sharrett Oncology Department.

The Canadian group's connection to Hadassah Hospital is in addition to its existing commitment to medical work in Asaf Harofe Hospital in Israel.

The New York-based Hadassah International was begun in Israel by a group of Americans who had made aliyah. Membership includes Jews and non-Jews, men and women.

Congresses are held every two years in Jerusalem and in the alternate years in a major city in one of its affiliates. The Montreal congress will be the first in North America.

BJC to host fundraiser for Feinberg on Jan. 8

TORONTO — A new fundraiser for Jay Feinberg is taking place on Jan. 8 at the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC), as time closes in on the young leukemia patient.

The Friends of Jay organization and the BJC are sponsoring an all-day three-on-three basketball tournament, starting at 9 a.m., to raise money for additional clinics that will hopefully produce a bone marrow watch. Without a marrow transplant, Jay, 26, has no chance of survival.

Jay Feinberg was diagnosed three years ago with Chronic Myelogenous Leukemia (CML). There is no record of a CML patient living more than 42 months, without a transplant. Even with a perfect marrow match, Jay's life is still at risk because transplants work best within one year after diagnosis.

Hundreds of clinics and fundraising events around the world, including in Israel, Japan and South Africa, have failed to find the marrow that will save Jay's life, because he has a rare combination of antigens.

Jay Feinberg

"There have been numerous walks, dance-a-thons, comedy club nights, even spaghetti dinners," says Jay's mother Arlene. "We generally don't even know about them in advance."

Over 50,000 names have been placed in a marrow registry because of clinics on Jay's behalf. Although the clinics have made transplants possible for other leukemia sufferers, a marrow match still eludes Jay Feinberg.

Feinberg is on daily doses of chemotherapy, but, "eventually all forms of treatment fail," his mother says.

Registration to play in the basketball tournament at 4588 Bathurst Street costs $100 for a team of four. Spectator admission is $5 and tickets for prize draws which will take place throughout the day are $5 as well. Prizes include baseball bats and basketballs signed by sports celebrities. The tournament will also feature a shoot-out with radio and TV personalities.

For registration or additional information about Play for Jay call (416) 636-1880 or register in person on Jan. 4, 7-9 p.m.

Lenkinski to be named vice-chair of OHRC

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Longtime community activist Louis Lenkinski is a rubber-stamp away from being appointed vice-chair of the Ontario Human Rights Commission (OHRC).

Citizenship Minister Elaine Ziemba announced she intends to appoint Lenkinski to the post. The appointment must be approved by an all-party standing committee on government agencies, a mere formality.

Lenkinski has served as commissioner of the OHRC for the past seven years and his anti-racism activities predate that by decades.

In the early 1950s, he was secretary of the Jewish Labor Committee, promoting the rights of labor. He has worked with the Ontario Federation of Labor since 1975 and before that with the Labor Council of Metropolitan Toronto.

Lenkinski sits on the national and regional executive of Canadian Jewish Congress and he serves as the Ontario chair of its joint community relations committee.

Lenkinksi said the number two position in the OHRC is primarily an adminstrative post. The vice-chair takes over if chair Rosemary Brown is absent. The vice-chair also participates in discussions on how best to advance human rights issues.

Louis Lenkinski

Lenkinski said as commissioner he took part in creating guidelines to deal with cases involving alleged discrimination on the basis of physical handicap, on procedures for same-sex couples claiming spousal benefits and on proposed drug tests for employees.

"I feel very elated by the appointment," Lenkinski said. "I'm probably the only Holocaust survivor in the whole world who is in the kind of active position to be determining what should be appropriate behavior in areas of racism, gender discrimination and physical handicap."

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

REVOLUTIONARY CHANGE OF NAME

After the Revolution in Russia, there was a rash of name changes. Of particular interest are the changes of some of the revolutionary leaders who were of Jewish origin:

Bronstein became Trotzky; Rosenfeld became Kamenev; Applebaum became Zinoviev; Tzederbaum became Martov; Wallach became Litvinov.

GLAZER — SKLAR

You don't need windex to see through the name Glazer and to recognize that it refers to the occupational name Glazier. Less transparent is the Ukrainian equivalent Sklar.

On the other hand, Glazner takes its name from the Village of Glaznow.

Toronto student becomes Swiss youth leader

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Grayson Levy

TORONTO — When Grayson Levy went to study in Germany after three years at York University, he planned to return in a year.

But last summer, while the 23-year-old was winding up his year in Heidelberg as an Ontario-Baden-Wurttemburg exchange student, an opportunity arose which he couldn't turn down.

Now, half a year later, Levy is employed as youth leader for the Jewish community in Basel, Switzerland.

In a Toronto interview, Levy spoke about his experience in Germany and the position in Switzerland.

He became observant in Heidelberg. "I was interested in trying out how religious people live," he said, admitting he was attracted to their strong Jewish identity.

Without a local rabbi to turn to, Levy got an observant friend to answer his questions. He also kept in touch with Rabbi Benjy Jacobi in Toronto. In February, Levy spent a month at Ohr Somayach Yeshiva in Israel.

"I discovered quite quickly that you learn by doing. Somehow just through osmosis I learned how to keep kosher, to pray."

While in Germany, he took courses at the University of Heidelberg's Department of Jewish Studies, established in the early 1980s. The town of 120,000 has a Jewish population of 280, Levy reports.

Last year's Jewish studies program had 120 students, of which "maybe 15" were Jewish. Among the students were several student priests, said Levy. "Yiddishkeit is very big in Germany — things like klezmer music, books on Judaism."

While in Heidelberg, Levy served as part-time gabbai at the local shul. An alumnus of Bialik Hebrew Day School, which he attended until Grade 6, he hadn't been to a Shabbat service in years, he said.

Levy says he was part of a "revolution" at the non-affiliated Heidelberg synagogue. A dozen people (five of them Orthodox, the rest "traditionalists") broke away to run their own prayer services at the college, said Levy. Eventually a compromise was reached, a mechitzah was built and they went back to the synagogue.

Levy found it strange that non-Jews came to synagogue services to daven and speak Hebrew. "A lot came because they studied it at college. Sometimes there were Jews who did not know how to bench and sing zemirot and non-Jews who did know how."

Levy says he encountered anti-Semitism in Heidelberg, but nothing that he wouldn't have encountered in Toronto.

During the summer a group of Jewish students from Basel visited the Heidelberg campus with their religion teacher to check out the Jewish studies program. Levy was interviewed as a replacement for their youth leader, who planned to make aliyah.

Since November, Levy has been working in Basel's Miklat (Jewish youth centre) running social activities and escorting students on day trips. For Chanukah he helped local youth groups Bnei Akiva and Emunah organize holiday events. Future plans include leadership training and visits to local public schools to talk about Judaism, Levy said.

"He is bringing a kind of 'new wind' and a new way of doing things," said Dr. Pierre Loeb, head of the local Jewish community's youth commission, in a telephone interview. "He has a lot of energy and good ideas."

Like their North American counterparts, the Jews of Basel are concerned about continuity, said Loeb, who explained they want to emphasize Jewish education.

"Grayson's part is what we call the 'not formal' education. In this way we can get more people and bring them Jewish life, Jewish friends and Jewish consciousness."

Basel has a Jewish population of over 2,000, with a myriad of Jewish organizations and institutions, including a Jewish day school and supplementary school. Its oldest synagogue, known simply as "the large synagogue," dates back 150 years and was renovated five years ago. "It's really beautiful," says Levy.

Intermarriage rate climbs among Montreal Jews

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Montreal Jews are intermarrying at a signficantly higher rate than they did a decade ago, according to a study by Federation CJA based on the 1991 Canadian census.

The study found that 9.3 per cent of married Jews had non-Jewish spouses, versus 5.5 per cent in 1981. That's an increase of 58 per cent, from 4,555 to 7,195.

More than one in 10 Jewish children under 19 living with both parents are in intermarried families.

The December study, entitled Issues of Jewish Identity, defines a Jew as someone who identifies himself as Jewish by religion or ethnicity. It does not include Jews who convert.

Jewish men are more likely to marry a non-Jew than vice versa, according to the survey.

Contrary to the data on American Jews, the study says that the greater a Montreal Jew's education and income, the more likely he or she is to intermarry. Among those with post-graduate degrees, the rate was 12.2 per cent, compared to 4.1 per cent for those with only a high school diploma.

In income terms, those who earned between $75,000 and $100,000 a year had an intermarriage rate of 10.6 per cent, while those making under $25,000 stood at 8.1 per cent.

Intermarriage has dramatically decreased among North African-born Jews. Twenty per cent of those who arrived here between 1940 and 1959 married non-Jews. Today only 6.8 per cent overall intermarry, and only 3.2 per cent among those who have been here since 1980.

Overall, anglophone Jews were slightly more likely to be intermarried than francophones.

Close to 20 per cent of intermarried couples reside on the West Island, while 24 per cent live outside the major Montreal Jewish areas.

The study suggests the community could do more to influence children of intermarried couples to identify as Jews.

The study also contains new information on Jewish education.

A total of 48 per cent or 7,551 Jewish children were in day schools in 1991: 53.9 per cent in elementary and 39.7 per cent in high schools.

That's a 12.6 per cent increase over 1981 when there were 6,704 day school students, this despite a decline in Jewish population from 103,425 to 101,210. Most of the growth has been among French and ultra-Orthodox schools, with English "mainstream" schools declining.

If ultra-Orthodox school enrolment is subtracted, the study shows only 39.1 per cent of Jewish children go to day schools.

When supplementary school programs are factored in, 55.2 per cent of Jewish children were receiving some formal Jewish education.

The study suggests the community should make a "more systematic effort" to increase Jewish day and supplementary school enrolment, but is not specific.

Manitoba teen apologizes for defacing shul

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — One of two rural Manitoba teens charged with spraying anti-Semitic graffiti on a small synagogue on Hallowe'en night has written an open letter to apology to the Jewish community.

In his letter, published in the Dec. 12 issue of the Interlake Spectator, the unnamed teen apologized for defacing the synagogue at Winnipeg Beach. "I realized what I did was very wrong and hurtful," he wrote. "I realize what you and your forefathers went through in past decades.

"It was a foolish prank made by two very foolish people. I have nothing against the Jewish community nor any other ethnic group. It was a very stupid thing to do and I'm extremely sorry. I hope in the years to come that nothing of this nature ever happens again. I hope you can find it in you to forgive me."

The 40-year-old Winnipeg Beach Synagogue is used only in the summers when Jewish families from Winnipeg head for their cottages at the popular lakeside resort 50 miles north of the city.

Good first step

Jim Mosher, a reporter for the Interlake Spectator, said he knows the letter writer well and believes he is sincere in his apology. He said the anti-Semitic attitudes he has noticed among some Winnipeg Beach tradespeople may reflect resentment by year-round residents towards cottagers that swell the town's population in the summer months.

"I was surprised to find those attitudes when I first moved here in 1981," the former Winnipeg Free Press reporter said. "There is a long history of this but I'm not sure why."

Evelyn Hecht, community relations director for the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council, describes the letter of apology as a good first step.

"The WJCC has received permission to prepare a victim impact statement in the probation officer's report on the incident," Hecht said. "He may be sorry but these teens have to understand quite clearly the kind of impact something like this has on our community."

As to the undercurrent of anti-Semitism Mosher has identified, Hecht would like to hold community workshops on racism and prejudice to educate the permanent residents.

The teens are to be sentenced in late January.

CELEBRATING BAYCREST'S PAST

Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care recently unveiled a giant exterior mural depicting its history. The 15 by seven and a half food mural, composed of thousands of small, colorful ceramic tiles, was made in tribute of Baycrest's 75th anniversary. Over the past two years, more than 1,000 members of the Baycrest community worked on the mural entitled Honor Thy Elders. The 15-panel mural portrays scenes from the centre's past, present and future. it was designed by clients and staff with input from the community members. The mural is permanently mounted on the exterior of Baycrest's Jewish Home for the Aged, The Abe and Elsie Posluns Building. Baycrest Centre supporter Al Green and Jewish Home for the Aged resident Ida Ashrow were among the guests at the recent dedication.

Malcolm Ross book out in B.C.

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Malcolm Ross, the New Brunswick school teacher whose writings deny the Holocaust, has done it again.

His book, The Real Holocaust: The Attack on Unborn Children and Life Itself, is now available in some Vancouver book stores. The book suggests that Jewish doctors are threatening "Christian civilization" by performing abortions.

The book was released two weeks after the near-fatal shooting of Jewish gynecologist Gary Romalis, who worked at an abortion clinic.

The book cover carries an obvious caricature of Dr. Henry Morgentaler, who has struggled for years to get abortion legalized in Canada.

Dr. Michael Elterman, community relations chairman of the Canadian Jewish Congress Pacific region, called the book "nut case fringe literature."

Ottawa journalist Warren Kinsella, who wrote Web of Hate, an expose of Canada's hate groups, told the Vancouver Sun his research uncovered connections between the anti-abortionist movement and the hate organizations. Kinsella has written about Ross and said "it's common to see abortion as a point of entry into the hate movement."

Allan Dutton, of the Canadian Anti-Racism Education and Research Society, claimed there is an "extreme element" within the anti-abortion movement linked to the far right and the racist right. He said the Ross publication indicates the need for the attorney general's department to take action against hate literature.

The $4 book can be purchased at the British Israel World Federation Bookstore, along with other anti-abortion and anti-Semitic literature.

Meanwhile the police are still hunting for the two men who allegedly shot Romalis Nov. 2 in the leg while he was having breakfast at home. As of Nov. 25 Romalis was still in hospital under police guard.

Police said they received information about the Ross book and other material linking fringes of the anti-abortion right to the racist right.

The Ross book is supposed to claim that Jewish doctors "have opened the floodgates of immigration, diluting our blood while slaughtering those of our Race by the millions . . . In fact the White proportion of the world's population is steadily declining."

The book claims there is a conspiracy "whose goal is the destruction of our Christian society."

Keeping a watchful eye

Before the end of last year, the Canadian public received an up-close look into the warped and sordid schemes of the Heritage Front, a group described by officials as the most prominent white supremacists in Canada. On Dec. 9 in the House of Commons, Solicitor General Herb Gray tabled a report of the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) which chronicled the activities and the findings of a paid CSIS informant who had infiltrated the racist group.

Our attention was immediately focused on the alarming disclosure that many Canadians, including some of the leadership of the Jewish community, had been targets of harassment, intimidation and even of possible assassination. The disclosure was accentuated by the fact that the government's own operative had actively taken part in the intimidation of Jewish leaders.

Complicating matters even more was the unsatisfactory response from the Metro Toronto police who decided not to alert Canadian Jewish Congress leaders to the threat hanging over them. Metro police however, have recently given assurances to Congress that similar dangers from anti-Semitic extremists will be handled differently in the future.

Despite the committee's conclusion that CSIS's efforts enhanced the protection of Canadian society including, in particular, the Jewish community, against potentially violent acts by racists, the report still warrants comprehensive analysis by appropriate security and race relations experts.

But the issues raised by the report are not restricted merely to matters of policing. They speak to the very heart of the values which all decent, law-abiding Canadians want our society to stand for: tolerance, mutual respect, fundamental freedoms, and the right to observe the traditions of one's ancestors without fear.

These values are precious. They form the exquisite centre of Canadian life.

However, the report makes chillingly clear that there is among us a group of individuals in whom hatred and resentment fester like a rotting sore. They are becoming increasingly sophisticated in their methods and increasingly brazen in their objectives. If given the opportunity, they would destroy what we hold to be precious. Thus, we must not ignore them or become complacent about the marginality of their numbers. The SIRC report makes the point very forcefully. And this, perhaps, is its chief merit. It speaks in plain language about a threat that is in our midst.

"[We] would like to put on the record our unshakeable conviction that the Government of Canada, through all means at its disposal, should continue to ensure that it is always aware of what is going on within extreme right wing racist and neo-Nazi groups. Canadians should never again repeat the mistakes of the past by underestimating the potential for harm embodied in hate-driven organizations."

The report reminds us that we must keep a watchful eye.

Fundamentally, craven

Fundamentally, terrorism is the calling card of the craven and the cowardly. It cuts down the defenceless and attacks the unarmed. Its sole purpose is to terrify and sow despair.

Last week, four Catholic priests were murdered in Algeria by members of a group called the Armed Islamic Group, the same group which hijacked the Air France airbus earlier in the week but failed to execute its plan of wanton killing and fiery death for passengers and Parisians alike.

Seasoned observers of terrorist groups were appalled but not surprised by the events; the violent acts were all of a piece.

For some time now, experts have exposed the operational and funding links among the radical, anti-western, Islamic organizations such as the Armed Islamic Group, Hezbollah, Islamic Jihad and Hamas, and warned of their potential for causing large-scale destruction and political upheaval. These organizations openly express their murderous objectives. They pose serious national and regional threats to virtually all the countries of North Africa and the Persian Gulf.

The only meaningful response to these terrorists and to the states that sponsor them is a comprehensive campaign of international cooperation. It is essential that western governments, including the government of Canada, act jointly and share intelligence to uncover the terrorists' plans, foil their attacks, bring them to justice and isolate the states who encourage, fund and train them. No locale is beyond the terrorists' deadly reach. The World Trade Centre, Argentina, Panama, England and now, France prove the case.

Letters to the editor

Letters are welcome if they are brief, in English or French, typewritten with lines double spaced, and of interest to our reading public. Readers are cautioned not to make sweeping claims against persons or institutions which they cannot verify, as libel laws are very stringent. We reserve the right to edit and condense letters, which must bear the sender's address, phone number and both handwritten and typed signatures.

INTERVIEW WITH CHRISTIE

When I read Vancouver solicitor Douglas Christie was interviewed by The CJN I did not know whether to laugh or cry, especially when Mr. Christie, the defender of neo-Nazis, expressed concern about Jews being harassed.

For anyone who followed the trial of Imre Finta, Mr. Christie certainly knows whereof he speaks about harassing Jews: I refer to his manner of cross-examining Jewish witnesses. The Ontario Court of Appeal saw fit to condemn his brand of advocacy and I was more than pleased that my complaint to the Law Society of Upper Canada was acted upon.

If by some remarkable transformation Douglas Christie really wants to do something worthwhile for the Canadian Jewish community, he might wish to use whatever skills he posseses as a lawyer and his powers of persuasion to inform his clients Ernst Zundel and James Keegstra that the Holocaust actually did occur and that six million Jews perished. I for one do not need the likes of Douglas Christie telling The CJN that in effect some of his best friends are Jewish.

YES I'M AN IMMIGRANT

You hear a great deal said these days about immigrants and the problems with some immigrants. Being a naturalized Canadian, and a former immigrant myself, sometimes it hurts me to hear how this problem is addressed by some people.

I suppose not everyone is knowledgeable when it comes to this topic. The people criticizing were possibly not even born when our immigrants were experiencing untold hardships in their native countries.

We must remember that not only our country, but the entire North American continent, would not exist as we know it today were it not for immigrants who toiled under difficult conditions, performed tasks no one else would and received very little in return, other than the privilege of living in a free and democratic country where they could practice their religion and culture without danger to them or their families.

Yes, we are experiencing difficult times, but must we place the blame on hard-working and honest people in order to fill the newspapers with all sorts of scandals? Yes, some of the immigrants who are allowed into our country do take advantage of the situation and abuse the system, but must we expect complete perfection?

MEN IN WIDE HATS

The "Friendly face greeted immigrants" travel section article (CJN Nov. 24) by Leila Speisman told of immigrants arriving at Halifax's Pier 21. What memories and images it evoked within me.

My father, Louis Webber, was president of Jewish Immigrant Aid Society for countless years. He met the boats and brought many immigrants to our home. My mother cooked their meals, and prepared brown paper bags filled with kosher food which they carried on the train to St. John, N.B., or Montreal.

In my earliest Halifax childhood years, I thought European Jewish people were bearded men with wide-brimmed hats who spoke a foreign language. There were so many at our kitchen table, so often, that it seemed very natural to me.

Thank you for the memories. It is important the story of that era be sustained. Future generations will be grateful knowing how their ancestors were received so warmly by caring people.

REUNION IN RUSSIA

The International Union of Former Junior Prisoners of Facism (IUFJPF) is a Moscow-based association of the people who were, as children, prisoners of Nazism.

This year is the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II. It is special for Russia, the war-time allies of the Soviet Union, veterans and their families, and for those whose family members did not survive the war or still bear its scars.

The IUFJPF plans an April 1995 international get-together of its members. The embassy will highly appreciate information about any associations or groups of former junior prisoners of fascism in Canada, or any other groups interested in establishing contacts with the Union.

The Dreyfus affair — 100th anniversary

By ARNOLD AGES

One hundred years ago Alfred Dreyfus was tried by a French kangaroo court, found guilty of high treason on a trumped-up charge of having transmitted military secrets to Germany, forced to run the gauntlet between rows of fellow officers, stripped of his command epaulettes and sentenced to life imprisonment on Devil's Island.

The shock of the French Jewish community was shared by decent citizens around the world. Yet a close scrutiny of anti-Semitism in France since the time of the Revolution affords a new perspective on the affair.

In 1793, 43 per cent of the delegates in France's Legislative Assembly voted against Jewish emancipation. The next century saw the rise of organized anti-Jewish movements and the appearance of a vulgar literature in which a Jewish conspiracy was highlighted.

During the same period, pockets within the Catholic Church disseminated religiously-oriented propaganda against Jews and linked the secretive Illuminati with an alleged Jewish plot. In the latter part of the century, a daily newspaper, La Libre Parole, parroted anti-Semitic detritus and invented some its own.

All this adds up to the Dreyfus Affair. What was not anticipated, however, was the polarization in France afterwards, which pitted the army, church and upper classes against French liberals and a lot of people with simple human integrity.

Emile Zola authored J'accuse, the well-known article which led to Dreyfus' exoneration. Zola was not alone in pushing for a reopening of Dreyfus' case. At least a dozen other people worked indefatigably for his release. The key man, however was Col. Georges Picquart, who as the head of French intelligence reasoned that since secrets were still being pilfered, someone other than Dreyfus must be guilty. It turned out to be Ferdinand Walsin Esterhazy.

For his honesty Picquart was exiled to a military post in North Africa, dragged into court by Esterhazy and sentenced to 60 days in jail. Meanwhile Zola's seismic article appeared in L'Aurore on Jan. 13, 1898: the 200,000 copies and the wheels of justice turned over quickly.

The first person to be run over was Colonel Henry, a forger of documents used in Dreyfus' conviction, who committed suicide in jail. The authorities ordered a new trial at Rennes in 1899. The army tribunal, anxious to protect the "honor" of the French military, found Dreyfus guilty again but gave him a sentence of only 10 years because of "extenuating circumstances."

In 1906, 12 years after his ordeal began, Dreyfus was fully pardoned by the High Court of Appeals. His military rank was returned and he fought with the French army during World War I. He was awarded the Chevalier de la légion d'honneur and died in 1935 as a good soldier and Frenchman.

Some suggest the story did not end there, but continued when the anti-Dreyfusards took their revenge under the Vichy regime.

Alfred Dreyfus as he is publicly disgraced in a degrading ceremony during which he proclaimed, "I am innocent."

Herzl's dispatch

The following is Theodore Herzl's description of the public humiliation of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus. In appeared in the Jan. 5, 1895, evening edition of the Neue Freie Presse.

"On this dismal winter's day the degradation of Captain Dreyfus, which was carried out in the grounds of the Military Academy, drew large numbers of the curious to the vicinity.

"Many officers were present, not a few of them accompanied by ladies. Entry into the grounds of the Ecole Militaire was permitted only to army officers and some journalists. Outside the grounds swarmed the morbid crowds which are always attracted by executions. A considerable number of police were on duty.

"At 9 a.m. the great open court was filled with a detachment of troops in square formation — 5,000 men in all. In the centre a general sat on horseback. A few minutes after 9 a.m., Dreyfus was led forth. He was dressed in his captain's uniform. Four men conducted him before the general. The latter said: 'Alfred Dreyfus, you are unworthy to bear arms. In the name of the French Republic I degrade you from your rank. Let the sentence be carried out.' Here Dreyfus lifted his right arm and called out: 'I declare and solemnly swear that you are degrading an innocent man. Vive la France!'

"At that instant the drums were beaten. The officer in charge began to tear from the condemned man's uniform the buttons and cords, which had already been loosened. Dreyfus retained his calm bearing. Within a few minutes this part of the ceremony was over.

"Then began the parade of the condemned before the troops. Dreyfus marched along the sides of the square like a man who knows himself to be innocent. He passed by a group of officers, who cried: 'Judas! Traitor!' Dreyfus cried back: 'I forbid you to insult me!'

"At 9:20 a.m. the parade was over. Dreyfus was then handcuffed and given into the custody of the gendarmes. From that point on he was to be considered a civilian prisoner and treated as such. When he had been led away the troops [filed] off the grounds. But the crowd surged toward the gates to watch the condemned man being led away. There were passionate shouts. 'Bring him out here, and we'll tear him to pieces!' But the crowd waited in vain. There was a curious excitement amongst those who had been able to witness the ceremony of the degradation. The strange, firm bearing of the prisoner had made a profound impression on some of them."

Later in the day Herzl sent off a supplementary report which appeared in the Sunday edition of his paper:

"To complete the picture of the ceremony it should be added that as Dreyfus was being paraded before the troops, among whom there were numbers of recruits, he kept calling out: 'I am innocent!' When he passed near a group of journalists he stopped for a moment and said: 'Tell all France that I am innocent!' Some of the journalists retorted with insults. Part of the crowd outside, which was able to catch a glimpse of the ceremony, shouted again and again: 'Death to the traitor!' "

Episode had far-reaching consequences

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

"Once [it] was over and the fever subsided, society . . . groups and individuals found themselves much as they had been before, as though nothing had happened."

Few observers would agree with this smug and all too glib assessment of the Dreyfus Affair by Leon Blum, the French-Jewish statesman.

This seminal episode, which unfolded over a 12-year period beginning in 1894, exposed the deep cleavages in French society and the persistence of anti-Semitism in Western Christian civilization.

But more to the point, Dreyfus' acquital and reinstatement as an artillery captain had far-reaching consequences, not only in France but in the Middle East.

The triumph of the Dreyfusards, as historian Jean-Denis Bredin suggests, strengthened parliamentary democracy by consolidating the Republic, dashed hopes for a restoration of the old reactionary order, and reduced the power of the army and the Roman Catholic Church, the forces which spearheaded the anti-Dreyfusard campaign.

The affair was, as a current exhibition at the Museum of the Diaspora in Tel Aviv states, the first media event in the modern world.

The mass media, Bredin writes, played a crucial role — helping send Dreyfus to prison despite his innocence, helping facilitate his release from Devil's Island in French Guiana, and helping convince the appellate court to proclaim his innocence.

The humiliation and degradation of Dreyfus had a profound effect on a Hungarian-born, Viennese journalist named Theodor Herzl.

Herzl's abiding faith in assimilation as a solution to anti-Semitism was broken by these events. Conventional wisdom holds that the affair led Herzl down the path of political Zionism.

But Jacques Kornberg, a University of Toronto historian, claims in a recently-published book that the affair had no real impact on Herzl's embrace of Zionism and his authorship of The Jewish State.

According to Kornberg, Herzl's preoccupation with anti-Semitism, which spawned his romance with Zionism, had its origins in the anti-Semitic rebuffs he experienced in Austria. This was what shattered his faith in assimilation.

Whatever interpretation one accepts, the fact of the matter is that Herzl became enmeshed in the Zionist movement after the first of two Dreyfus trials, and that the emergence of the state of Israel in 1948 was a function, ideologically at least, of Zionism.

Herzl's beliefs notwithstanding, the affair did not dilute the French Jewish community's propensity for assimilation.

As historian Paula Hyman suggests, the accusations levelled against Dreyfus — himself an assimilated Alsatian Jew — shook French Jewry's faith in the readiness of French institutions to uphold the ideals of the 1789 revolution.

Yet the positive outcome of the affair, and the condemnation of anti-Semitism by French governments during its course, was taken as a vindication by Jewish leaders of their neutrality.

As the affair unfolded, spokesmen for French Jews refrained from public activity on behalf of Dreyfus, claiming, rightly or wrongly, that the political process would do its work.

When the dust finally settled, Hyman writes, French Jewry enjoyed the reputation of being the most successfully assimilated and most stable Jewish community in Western Europe.

Frenchmen of Jewish background like Emile Durkheim and Henri Bergson achieved acclaim in their respective fields without denying their Jewishness or converting to Christianity.

Be that as it may, the affair ultimately intensified anti-Semitism, reinforcing certain stereotypes about Jewish separateness.

The anti-Semitic diatribes were orchestrated by a pantheon of polished anti-Semitic ideologues-cum-rabble-rousers like Edouard Drumont, Maurice Barres and Charles Maurras, the founder of Action Francaise.

The deep-seated resentments harbored by these unreconstructed anti-Dreyfusards bubbled to the surface during the shameful Vichy interregnum. The period was characterized by primitive nationalism of the kind that had branded Dreyfus as a German spy and traitor, anti-Semitic legislation patterned after Nazi Germany, and French police roundups which resulted in the deaths of 75,000 Jews.

And the affair still resonates. In 1993, the official historian of the French army cast aspersions on Dreyfus' innocence. Shortly afterward, he was sacked.

As historian Michael Marrus has suggested, the affair only reinforced Dreyfus' desire for assimilation. Throughout it, Dreyfus felt no solidarity with the Jews of France, nor did he really believe what was being condemned in him was his Jewishness, Bredin writes. His letters from prison to his beloved wife, Lucie, are evidence of his attitude.

In the final analysis, Dreyfus was a conformist who was out of his depth during his trials and tribulations, a true patriot who loved France to the point that the very idea of treason horrified him. Before he died, on July 12, 1935, he plaintively declared: "I was only an artillery officer whom a tragic error prevented from following his course."

A bit of nostalgia

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

I had my first sabbatical in 1956. At the time we lived in Minnesota where I was rabbi of Mount Zion Temple in St. Paul. (By coincidence, it was founded exactly 100 years before, the same year as Toronto's first synagogue, Holy Blossom.) I had a replacement rabbi take care of the congregation, and with my wife and two children, I set out for Europe and Israel. It was my family's first visit; I had been there in 1935.

Recently I came across the letters I sent to the congregation and which were printed in the Temple Bulletin. They intrigued me because they reflected the enthusiasm with which we all greeted the presence of the relatively new state.

It was shortly before the outbreak of the Suez Canal war, and the country was empty of tourists. In the new Caesarea Hotel there was only one other couple, and it was no different in Haifa, Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. Here then, a little nostalgia.

Tel Aviv, April 17, 1956

Shalom!

It's 7 a.m. now, and the house is quiet. Our balcony looks right out on the Mediterranean, whose breaking waves form a constant background of sound, which even the early automobiles can't drown out. Need I tell you — it's lovely. To be sure, we are four flights up, and no elevators — a small hotel right next to the big luxurious Dan.

The flags are still flying from yesterday's big Independence Day celebration. We were in Haifa then where the parade was. Good friends had made it possible for us to go to an office suite in town, from whose windows we could see it well. It was a wonderful day; half of Israel's population was there, in all its colorful mixture — Moroccans with earlocks and beards; Orientals of all sorts; kibbutzniks and city dwellers; Arabs and Tcherkessians; tourists and officials — and tens of thousands of youngsters — many of whom had danced in the streets the night before.

The parade was quite unlike parades I've seen (and I have seen a few). "This is what stands between us and annihilation" they seemed to say — and these were their boys, smartly marching; manning the tanks, flying the jets overhead. I am not a militarist, but I could not help but be moved by this elemental outpouring of a simple desire: to know one's own strength. The parade was really quite short but the spirit of a folk festival lasted for 1½ days. Schools let out early the day before, street dancing when night fell, then the pilgrimage to town on the day itself and the attempt to get home to the top of Mt. Carmel, with 100,000 people clamoring for the same buses and cabs. It took us two hours, but we made it, none the worse for wear; and we all had shared in the spirit of the fun and good will which prevailed overall.

I probably should attempt to tell you — with the Arab-Israel situation so precarious — how the people feel about it, about their future, and about America, but this will have to wait for another time, when I can write with more leisure than I have had so far, and when I can reflect on it at greater length. For I will need a little time to digest the myriad of impressions for which kind friends have helped to set the stage. We picnicked at Lake Kinneret; we played archeologist in the sands at Caesarea and dug up some most interesting relics which we hope to ship home without too much breakage [note: the area had not yet been excavated]; visited cousins we had not seen in 25 years; discussed everything from politics to philosophy and religion with Israelis, and have just had one marvelously enriching time.

The sea has changed from light blue to streaked green with azure-blue in fore- and background, and it's time for beakfast (Israeli style). The children have found friends to play with and we have taken hundreds of pictures, some of which, by law of average, might even come out. And so, for today, with all the best from all of us!

Does the above make you remember your first trip to Israel?

A new year's survival strategy

By Erica Meyer Ruzsin

Usually new year's resolutions are pretty grandiose, based on pledges to change lifelong habits, clean up long-standing faults or institute dramatic self improvements of one kind or another.

You know, that's the school of thought wherein I'd promise to lose 20 pounds, stop biting my nails, file all my papers and repaint the house, and to get it all done before Pesach.

If you belong to that school of thought (and I was a pupil there myself until this year), you are doomed to a very hard first week of January, a deeply disappointing second week of January, and pretty much of a routine of yo-yo dieting, stubby fingernails, missing correspondence, and peeling paint for the rest of the year.

No more. I have decided to break these tasks down into smaller resolutions: I will not eat chocolate, today. I will paint my nails, this week. I will buy a box of file folders. I will paint the guest room book shelves. And that will serve, thank you; it will serve quite well.

This is a survival, stress reduction decision. I am going to resolve to do teeny, weenie things, so that I have some faint chance of success. Instead of yearning for major new initiatives, I plan to launch a few small beginnings that may even turn out to have middles and ends.

As part of this novel approach, I am also going to look forward instead of backward. I will promise to revisit every box of stored clothing and sort it all out. I will resolve to sort out the clothes in the mending box. I might even mend them.

I will not swear to organize the last decade's worth of family photos. I will resolve to organize 1995's new family pictures as they come in.

This is a companion to another resolution: I will admit (and even discard) bad purchase decisions and move on. I made a bad purchase decision right around the first of January two years ago: scrapbooks went on sale and I stocked up on them. I purchased about eight scrapbooks, based on making a resolution to catalogue and preserve all these candids from all these trips and birthday parties. I never did it.

The scrapbooks not only haunted me, they stymied me, looming there, discouraging any less exhaustive photo-organization project. With scrapbooks, every picture had to be slotted chronologically, labeled accurately and positioned perfectly. The result was that nothing got done at all.

I am giving the scrapbooks away. They were a mistake. I admit it. As a substitute, I have purchased photo boxes, just like index card boxes, only bigger. If I can sort my pictures into, say, specific years, specific vacations, or even specific children, that will do. At least, for the foreseeable future. Maybe when the kids grow up ...

This approach is not for everyone. If you can set lofty goals and achieve them, more power to you. Go climb Everest. Go learn to speak and read Japanese. Go make your own dust ruffles. Your mother and I will be very proud of you, just don't expect me to come along.

I will climb the stairs at the office instead of riding the elevator — at least, sometimes. I will brush up on my rusty Hebrew. I will even attach an occasional button, but mediocrity is my friend in this one regard. I shall not promise what I cannot produce. It is one thing to be a can-do person, and another thing all together to set up a series of tasks no one could do, at least, no one who is also raising children, sleeping six hours a night and fixing three square meals a day.

In my case, making miniature resolutions may mean making meaningful strides, one cowardly, contained step at a time. So, instead of announcing all the major, tricky, astounding things I pledge to do, I will instead wish you a Happy New Year with this one resolution: succeed. Accept yourself. Aim small, one good goal at a time.

Comparative law: The Talmud on drunkeness

By RABBI MARK DRATCH

"I was drunk." And with this defense the Supreme Court of Canada on Sept. 30 acquitted a rapist from any responsibility for his crime. In at least three subsequent cases, judges have found defendants either too drunk or too stoned on drugs to be aware that they had committed assault.

Needless to say the community has reacted strongly and legislators are scrambling to find ways to right this apparently senseless and grossly inequitable wrong. Perhaps a lesson in Jewish law could be helpful. Let us consider a Talmudic discussion in Tractate Eruvin 65a.

A person must be legally competent in order to be convicted of a crime. And, yes, even in Halachah (Jewish law) drunkenness may be a defense. Thus the Talmud records a statement of Rabbi Elazar ben Azaryah that he could justifiably exempt the entire world from judgment since the day of the destruction of the Temple until present times, using as a basis the words of Isaiah 51:21, "Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted and drunken . . ." Apparently being drunk relieves a person of his culpability for illegal actions. Score one for the Supreme Court!

This position is contradicted, however, by the ruling that validates all business transactions entered into by an intoxicated person and legislates the infliction of any punishment he deserves for the crimes he committed, "the general rule being that he is regarded as a sober man in all respects except that he is exempt from prayer." Apparently even an intoxicated person is considered legally competent. Score one for the victim!

The Talmud resolves this contradiction by distinguishing between two levels of intoxication. A person remains legally competent if, despite his inebriation, he is still aware of what he is doing. If, however, he is as drunk as the biblical Lot (Genesis 19:30), being totally unconscious of his behavior, he is free from blame. Maimonides in his Code (Hilchot Mechirah 29:18; see also Choshen Mishpat 235) equates such a person with a shoteh, one who is mentally and legally incompetent.

The Mishnah recognized the inherent unfairness of the situation, acknowledging in Baba Kamma 8:4, "There is an inequity in dealing with deaf-mutes, mentally incompetent individuals, and minors. One who harms them is liable to compensate them for the damages he causes, whereas if they would harm another they are not liable." The law rightly protects them from all harm, but because they are legally incompetent, it also relieves them from any liability. This is the position of the Canadian court as well. The issue in both legal systems is one of competence.

However, Jewish law does not stop here. According to Halachah, the drunk defense is effective only in those cases delineated in the Talmud, i.e., to relieve parties of liability for business agreements they may have entered and to exempt them from receiving punishment for crimes they may have committed. However, if one harms another person or his property, even if he is in as drunken a stupor as Lot, he is still responsible. R. Joel Sirkis (1561-1640), known as Bach, explains that a person "should have been careful from the start not to become as inebriated as Lot and cause harm. Who forced him to get so drunk that he became unaware of what he was doing? Since he brought this on himself he is liable for the damage he caused." (Teshuvot haBach, Yeshanot, no. 62) There is no crime in getting drunk per se (except perhaps for the harm you cause to your liver and brain), but if a person is going to drink he has the legal burden to make sure that he does not drive a car or in any way injure or assault another. Bach maintains that the perpetrator is guilty because of his original negligence in getting so exceedingly intoxicated without having first made certain that he would not cause harm. It is because the original recklessness occurred at a time when he was legally competent, even though he subsequently became incompetent, that he is held responsible.

If the House of Commons is looking for a way to amend the Criminal Code, perhaps they could take a lesson from the Talmud. If they did, the courts and the community would all come out as winners. Lechaim!

The legacy of the Rothschilds

Reporting from Frankfurt, Germany, Sheldon Kirshner takes a close look at a major museum exhibit.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

The Rothschilds are not just a European Jewish family. They are a legendary institution — a fixture in international banking and entrepreneurship and a bright star in the firmament of civil rights and practical Zionism.

Whether we admit it or not, we are mystified by the Rothschilds, by their glittering wealth, by their chameleon-like cunning, by their social cachet and by their fabulous connections down through the centuries.

As befits their status, the Rothschilds have been profiled in books, newspaper and magazine articles and movies. And now, for the first time ever, they are the subject of a major exhibition at the Jewish Museum in Frankfurt, which runs until Feb. 27.

The exhibition coincides with the 250th anniversary of the birth of the patriarch of this illustrious clan, Meyer Amschel, who was born in Frankfurt's Judengasse, a ghetto separated from the rest of the town. It also coincides with the 1,200th anniversary of Frankfurt, an Americanized banking, publishing and communications centre with a revived Jewish community numbering some 5,000.

Appropriately enough, the exhibit, simply entitled The Rothschilds, is being held in a building closely linked with the famous family. The Jewish Museum was once the Rothschild Palace, an elegant edifice that housed the family's private art collection.

More than a year in the making, The Rothschilds is sweeping in conception and execution, tracing the family's development from unemancipated confinement in the ghetto to unparalleled influence in the seats of government and royal houses.

But not surprisingly, the exhibit, consisting of a panorama of paintings, drawings, woodcuts, lithographs, photographs, maps, artifacts, documents and letters, is more than just a chronicle of the accumulation of a fortune and the attainment of power.

Transcending the Rothschilds' rise to prominence, it offers a tantalizing glimpse of their sumptuous lifestyle, their yearning for acceptance and yichus, their pastimes and personal causes and, of course, their position as petitioners in the struggle for Jewish emancipation.

Nevertheless, the focus is on the Rothschild's role as bankers, financiers and capitalists par excellence.

The family doyen, Meyer Amschel, was expected to be a rabbi and, indeed, he studied for the rabbinate in Furth. But the untimely death of his parents forced him to choose a different course. He became a coin dealer and a banker, at a time when the old political order in Europe was collapsing and the walls of the suffocating ghettos were falling.

With an eye on the main chance, Meyer Amschel cultivated a calculated relationship with a member of minor royalty, William of Hanau. It enabled him to become a court Jew. Soon enough, he was a supplier to the Austrian imperial army.

Meyer Amschel's sons set off for London, Paris, Vienna and Naples. Yet they never broke ranks. A partnership agreement, signed in 1825, empowered the brothers to act jointly and harmoniously, thereby concentrating the firm's assets.

By all appearances, Nathan, who set up the British operation, was the shrewdest of them. Due to his activities, the hub of the budding Rothschild conglomerate shifted from Frankfurt to London.

Nathan, who died in 1836, was nothing if not a realist. "It requires a great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a great fortune," he noted.

Nathan was a workaholic. As he put it: "My only pleasure is my business." But one would be hard-pressed to know that, judging by William Hobaday's idealized 1821 oil portrait of Nathan with his wife and children.

The brothers turned their greatest profits after 1815, speculating in bonds, exploiting differences in quotations on the various exchanges and conducting money transactions swiftly. They were superbly informed of current events. Fast, clear information brought them untold affluence.

In the first decades of the 19th century, they grew immensely rich by building up a monopoly on loans to European powers and by plunging into railway construction. They were close to Prince Metternich, the clever foreign minister of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

The growth of nationalism led to a loosening of ties between the various branches of the Rothschild family. But this development hardly dimmed their appetite for wheeling and dealing.

Working in tandem with Benjamin Disraeli, the British prime minister, the Rothschilds were instrumental in Britain's successful bid to gain control of the shares in the Suez Canal company.

Looking further afield, they expanded their reach by speculating in Russian oil, South African diamonds and Latin American minerals.

The Rothschilds resisted assimilation and shunned conversion, remaining nominally Orthodox. And in the 19th century, they preferred intrafamily marriages, a phenomenon that enabled them to keep their wealth within the family.

Despite their standing, the Rothschilds felt the sting of anti-Semitism, not only in the 19th century but under Nazi hegemony. A lithograph, dated 1848, depicts Baron Amschel von Rothschild as a shabbily-dressed parvenu. Such animus did not deter them. In fact, they mingled with the creme de la creme of society, and sought out titles and honors.

To the Nazis, the Rothschilds epitomized the myth of "international Jewish finance." They were defamed in a 1940 film, Die Rothschilds, which spawned two more viciously anti-Jewish films, Jud Suss and Der ewige Jude.

All but one of the Rothschilds escaped the Holocaust. The wife of Philippe de Rothschild, Elizabeth, was not so fortunate. She was murdered in a German concentration camp.

From Meyer Amschel onward, the Rothschilds did what they could to ease the restrictions against Jews. In all probability, Lionel de Rothschild best exemplified this tradition. In 1858, 10 years after he had been elected, he finally took his seat as a Jew in the British parliament. Before that, members had to take an oath "in the true faith of a Christian." Henry Berraud's striking painting, circa 1874, encapsulates that historic moment.

In the 19th century, the Rothschilds developed an awareness of themselves as a dynasty. They built fairy-tale mansions such as Mentmore Castle and Ferrieres Castle. They kept magnificent gardens and greenhouses, horticulture being a highly-regarded social pursuit. They bought vineyards and produced some of the finest Bordeaux wines. They posed for distinguished painters like Jean Dominique Ingres (the 1848 oil canvas of Baroness Betty de Rothschild portrays an exotic beauty). They collected paintings, furniture and ornaments, some of which, like a drinking horn and a goblet, are on display.

A drawing of Nathan Rothschild by Richard Dighton, 1817.

Last but not least, the Rothschilds were inextricably associated with the Zionist movement. So much so that Israeli banknotes, coins, streets and towns bear their names today.

Of all the Rothschilds, Edmond de Rothschild (1845-1934) was the chief benefactor of Zionist settlement in Palestine. Indeed, his name is indelibly bound up with the 1917 Balfour Declaration, which committed Britain to supporting a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Yet he was not a political Zionist like Theodor Herzl. Edmond wanted to make it possible for persecuted East European Jews to settle in Palestine. He did not subscribe to the notion that all Jews should resettle in Zion.

Be that as it may, Edmond was a seminal figure in Zionism, just as the Rothschilds were a behemoth in banking and finance.

Jewish World

By Sheldon Kirshner

Eastern Galicia, now in Western Ukraine but once a province of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and then a part of Poland, used to be one of the most important Jewish centres in Europe. Cities such as Lvov, Brody and Belz were renowned in the Jewish world. But practically all remnants of Jewish culture were destroyed by the Germans and the Soviets during and after the Holocaust.

The Jewish artifacts of that seemingly distant pre-war period — popular art and synagogue ritual objects — are now on display at Beth Hatefutsoth, the Museum of the Jewish Diaspora at Tel Aviv University.

The exhibition, which is scheduled to close this week, was made possible through major grants from, among others, Charles and Andrea Bronfman of Montreal and Lufthansa German Airlines.

Entitled Rediscovered Treasures, the exhibition was loaned to Beth Hatefutsoth by the Museum of Ethnography and Crafts in Lvov (or Lviv, as it is known in Ukrainian). Last displayed in Lvov in 1990 and then in Kiev a year later, this magnificent Judaica collection had never been seen in the West until its arrival in Tel Aviv.

According to Beth Hatefutsoth's chief curator and deputy director, Joel Cahen, Rediscovered Treasures has just begun its foreign run. In May, it will resurface at Vienna's Jewish Museum. And then it will appear in Berlin, Los Angeles and New York. There is also a possibility that Rediscovered Treasures will turn up at the Canadian Museum of Civilization in Hull, Quebec, in 1997 or 1998.

Rediscovered Treasures consists of two segments, culled from the Maksymillian Goldstein collection and the Lvov Jewish Museum collection.

Goldstein (1880-1942), a banker, was an amateur ethnographer who entrusted his private collection to the Museum of Ethnography and Crafts after Germany marched into Eastern Galicia in 1941. The Germans renamed Lvov Lemberg, and murdered most of its Jews, including Goldstein, who perished in the Janowska work camp.

The Jewish Museum in Lvov was opened in 1934. Nationalized by the Soviet Union after its invasion of the region in 1940, it was ultimately absorbed by the Museum of Ethnography and Crafts.

For decades, both collections were off-limits to the public, gathering dust. But with the onset of glasnost, the situation changed.

Rediscovered Treasures is framed by Yiddishe Lemberg, a flickering, nostalgic 10-minute documentary of Lvov made by the Goskind brothers in 1939, on the eve of the calamity that would sweep over Nazi-occupied Europe.

The objets d'art, comprised of more than 200 items dating back to the 18th century, include superbly-crafted Torah curtains, crowns, mantles and pointers, Purim plates, dreidels, Passover glasses and dishes, Chanukah lamps, Yom Kippur skullcaps, Sukkot cups, holiday paper cuts, mezzuzot and Sabbath candelabrums.

There are also intriguing black-and-white photographs of Lvov's crowded marketplace (circa 1903 and 1930), of a bustling country fair in Kolomyia and of Goldstein and his family.

In short, Rediscovered Treasures conjures up images of a bygone era, and reminds us yet again of the rich Jewish civilization that once flourished in Eastern Galicia.

Rabbinical Reflections

By RABBI RON AIGEN

One way of understanding Torah is to see it as God's attempt to teach humankind the basic principles which would make for a just society. A religious humanist would read the Bible as one people's search for divine justice in the world. In either case, the Bible presents a search for a world built on justice.

The turning point in Abraham's career as founder of a new spirituality came when he challenged God to do justice at Sodom and Gemorrah. His challenge, "Shall the Judge of all the earth not do justice?!" marked a revolutionary moment in the history of religion. For the first time, a human being demanded that his God live up to godly ideals.

Throughout the rest of the Torah we trace the spiritual developments of the people who enter into a covenant relationship with their God, a contractual agreement to maintain justice. One of the loftiest pronouncements towards the conclusion of the Torah is Tzedek, tzedek tirdof — Justice, justice you shall pursue — meaning that in the course of seeking justice, you shall also act justly.

The prophetic tradition which follows the Torah can be summed up as one unending plea to the Israelites to understand that their religion is not perfunctory ritual sacrifice. Rather, the sacrifice they must make in their lives is to live by the concept of tzedek u-mishpat — righteous justice.

A second major theme which also runs through our Torah is compassion. Our rabbis said that hesed ve-rahamim — loving kindness and compassion — are the beginning and the end of Torah. In the beginning God clothes the naked, Adam and Eve, and in the end God buries Moses.

Compassion together with justice are the religious issues which create the major tension in Jewish life. We seek, but cannot have, both perfect compassion and perfect justice.

The following saying of the prophet Micah is often quoted as a summary of what it means to be a Jew: "It has been told to you what is good and what God demands — only to do justice, love compassion and walk humbly with your God."

It is understandable, therefore, that when we come to today's Torah reading some of us are disturbed by what seems to be neither an act of justice nor one of kindness, but rather a show of brute force.

In parshat Bo, Exodus 10-13:16, we come to the last of the Ten Plagues. Locusts, darkness and the slaying of the first born are invoked as the dramatic climax which leads to the Israelites' exodus from Egypt. The Pharaoh's response to all except the last plague is a repeated hardening of his heart. And somewhere about here, the question usually arises: "Were these plagues really necessary?" Couldn't a just and compassionate God have freed the Israelites by less violent means?

This question has been raised by Jews for generations; not only by contemporary critics, but by the early rabbis. In response to the verse in which God hardens Pharaoh's heart, Rabbi Johanan said: "Doesn't this provide heretics with ground for arguing that he had a means of repenting, since it says: "For I have hardened his heart?' " To which Rabbi Simon ben Lakish replied: "Let the heretics be silenced. It says in Proverbs III 3, 4, 'if it concerns scorners, God scorns them.' When God warns a man once, twice and even a third time, and he still does not repent, then God closes his heart against repentance so that vengeance be exacted from him for his sins. Thus it was with the wicked Pharaoh."

The rabbis tell this midrash or legend because they are sensitive the problem of the seeming injustice. They conclude that a repeated offender of a crime will not change his ways, and after a certain point, even God does not expect or want repentance.

The short answer to our question about the morality or justice and compassion of the plagues seems to be that in certain extreme cases you simply cannot apply the normal rules of morality.

Compassion, however, is not lost forever. The rabbinic midrash tells us that when the Israelites, after crossing the Red Sea in safety, began singing praise to God, God stopped them, crying: "Don't you see the Egyptians are drowning in the sea — and yet you dare sing me praises! They are my children as you are my children."

Court rules against Ibo tribe

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Members of the Ibo tribe in Nigeria are not Jewish, according to a recent ruling from Israel's High Court of Justice.

As a result, an estimated two million members of the tribe do not have the automatic right to immigrate to Israel and receive citizenship under the country's Law of Return.

The ruling came in response to a petition filed by Chima Edward Onyolo, an Ibo who has been living in Israel for six years and is married to an Israeli woman.

As the husband of a Jew, Onyolo is entitled to recognition and permanent residence in Israel under the Law of Return, which also applies to the relatives of Jews.

But Onyolo sought recognition as a Jew himself, saying his tribe had historical links to Judaism.

He cited several customs practiced by the Ibo, including circumcision on the eighth day after a male is born.

Koschitzky recalled as a man of vision

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Philanthropist and businessman Israel Koschitzky was remembered as a man of vision, determination and dedication to learning at a shloshim service held last month at Or Chaim yeshivah.

Koschitzky had donated the recently opened addition to the yeshivah. He was also a founding contributor to the institution.

Grandson Jonathan Koschitzky, a graduate of Or Chaim, completed a siyum mishnayas (a Talmud portion studied to honor someone who has died) at the service.

He praised his grandfather for overcoming the obstacles in his life: losing everything during the Holocaust; being forced to escape first the Nazis, then the Communists; starting a new life in a new land. "With bubbie [Golda Koschitzky], he never despaired. They persevered, they prevailed."

Israel Koschitzky was "steadfast in his belief and [his commitment to] Jewish tradition," Jonathan said. His earliest memory of his grandfather was him davening the Neilah service on Yom Kippur: the last, him listening to a discourse on the weekly Torah portion.

Rabbi Moses Burak of Beth Jacob Congregation spoke of Koschitzky's generosity "that went beyond the norms of marble [dedication] tablets."

"brought grace, dignity, a sense of aristocracy" to every city he came to. He was a man of vision, Rabbi Kerzner said, who could translate his dreams into reality, and he conducted his business "according to the highest standards of ethics."

Rabbi Kerzner praised his sons, Henry and Saul Koschitzky, and their families for "following in his ways, and advancing his principles in the community."

Grandson Yoel Koschitzky said despite his difficulties and the fact that he lost most of his family during the war, his grandfather "was not spiteful or bitter. His cup was always half full, not half empty."

He taught his children and grandchildren "to think, to do things properly, to be honest, to not be afraid to make mistakes." Through the institutions he founded and helped, "he changed the Jewish world."

Rabbi Shlomo Gemara, rosh yeshivah of Or Chaim and Ulpanat Orot Girls' School, chaired the event.

Built shul in Calgary

Koschitzky contributed to yeshivot in Israel, and built a shul in Calgary as well as the community mikvah in Toronto.

"A mikvah guards the purity of the Jewish people; a yeshivah guards the life of the Jewish people. He knew that without Torah there is no life," Rabbi Burak said.

Rabbi Yitzchak Kerzner paid tribute to Koschitzky as a man who

Sharing — the key to a better marriage

LONDON, Ont. — A lecture on The Jewish Way in Love and Marriage drew some 70 women to the London Jewish Community Centre recently. The guest speaker was Toronto educator Sherry Wise.

Joni Lutterman introduced the speaker, who teaches at The Women's Institute of Advanced Torah Studies and Bais Yakov High School.

Wise's talk centred on the idea of giving and perfectibility in marriage.

She explained that according to oral tradition, Adam was first created as both male and female — "a single entity which could reproduce." But he was divided, said Wise, in order to create Chavah (Eve), because as a self-sufficient being he was unable to develop spiritually.

What Adam needed was "the capacity to give to another human being," she said.

Marriage forces us "to shift the focus of concern away from ourselves and on to another human being" and thus enables us to grow.

She said that the Torah offers a couple a unique way to ensure the growth and success of their marriage.

The laws of Taharas Hamishpachah (family purity) are as relevant and meaningful today as they were centuries ago, Wise said. The unique balancing of separation and togetherness offer an opportunity for sexual expression and communication on many different levels.

The Jewish way in love and marriage brings a spirit of rejuvenation and excitement into the relationship, she said.

Over the last 15 years, the community has hosted a series of lectures on women's issues, a project initiated by the same women who founded the local mikvah.

The lecture series is co-sponsored by every Jewish organization in London that involves women: Beth Tefilah Sisterhood, Friends of Lubavitch, Hadassah-WIZO, the London Jewish Community Mikvah, the London Jewish Community Centre, National Council of Jewish Women, Or Shalom Sisterhood, and Temple Israel.

BAYCREST STAFF SHARE IN AWARD

Six employees of Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care recently received the Hy and Bertha Shore Award, which encourages continuing education and professional growth among Baycrest staff. The annual award, supported by the late Hy and Bertha Shore and their family, recognizes creativity and gives Baycrest staff the opportunity to pursue higher education or develop technical skills. The award winners are (clockwise from lower left): Rebecca Szerman, Medical Administration, who is enrolled in the Human Resources Management Program at Humber College; Eileen Cappell, Nursing, who is taking her PhD. in Social Policy, Aging and Health Care at the Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto; Gus Moran, Maintenance Department, who is taking a master's degree in Environment Studies at York University; and Carol Robertson, Food & Nutrition Services, who is taking courses in the Management in Health Sciences program at the University of Toronto. They are pictured with Fred Shore (front row, centre), son of the late Hy and Bertha Shore, who presented the awards. Award winners not shown are Shelley Dunkelman, Social Services, who is working towards a master of social work degree at the University of Toronto, and Pat Moffat, Social Services, who is working on a manual for Baycrest families and friends called How to Visit With Your Relative.

Shaare Zedek Foundation starts campaign

TORONTO — The Toronto New Leadership Division of The Canadian Shaare Zedek Hospital Foundation is planning to raise $100,000 for new medical equipment for the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit at Shaare Zedek Medical Centre.

Division chair Michael Kerzner said the money can be raised withing three years. "Since many of us have young children of our own or hope to have in the near future, we're very aware of how vital the work of this department is to the people of Israel."

Shaare Zedek's Neonatology Department, a regional centre treating at-risk newborns, now treats 26 infants. An expansion will bring that number to 40.

The group anticipates raising the bulk of the $100,000 at its annual golf tournament. The fifth annual tournament is scheduled for June 22 at the Kleinburg Golf and Country Club.

For information on the Shaare Zedek Toronto New Leadership Division, please call (416) 781-3584.

Court ruling could affect refugee claims

The ruling could have wider applications for the roughly 1,000 Israeli citizens — almost all of them from the former Soviet Union — who have made refugee claims in Canada, says immigration lawyer Sergio Karas.

Karas, a board member of Jewish Immigrant Aid Society (JIAS), said he welcomed the decision. "It's high time" claims of persecution in Israel are rejected, Karas told The CJN. "I'm very glad they put an end to this nonsense."

Israel has continued to be a major source of refugee claims in Canada. Between Jan. 1 and Sept. 30, 1994, the IRB heard to completion 861 claims from Israeli citizens.

It granted refugee status to 344 claimants and denied it to 445. Seventy-two claims were abandoned or withdrawn.

Over the past two years, Canada has granted refugee status to over 500 Israeli citizens, the vast majority from the former Soviet Union.

Allegations of harassment

Their claims have involved allegations of harassment, threats, discrimination in housing, work and schools, and even beatings at the hands of police officers and soldiers — all supposedly because of their mixed status.

The controversy boiled over last summer, when Israel called on Canada to end its policy of granting refugee status to claimants from Israel.

The Israeli embassy in Ottawa and leading Israeli officials have also called on Canada to stop believing claims of persecution.

Karas said the ruling will likely be used by the IRB to reject similar claims in the future.

Israel's ambassador to Canada, Itzhak Shelef, told The CJN his government has no comment on the court ruling. "We neither criticize it or praise it. We stand aside."

Nevertheless, Shelef said Israel will continue to press Ottawa to rejects refugee claims from Israeli citizens.

He said claimants are "exploiting the Canadian system" at taxpayers' expense and that granting refugee status is "a mistake."

"I hope the IRB will learn the real conditions in Israel and will understand that there is no persecution."

He called the increase in the number of successful refugee claims from Israeli citizens "unfortunate."

CJC discusses war crimes with Marchi

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Representatives of Canadian Jewish Congress met recently with Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi to press him to take legal action on files transferred to him by the Justice Department's war crimes unit.

At least eight files were reported transferred to Marchi's ministry after Justice Department lawyers determined that stripping suspected war criminals of their Canadian citizenship and deporting them would prove a more successful remedy than criminal prosecution.

Jack Silverstone, a spokesman for Congress on war crimes issues, said the Jewish community expects swifter action from the Immigration Department than from Justice, where the war crimes portfolio has stagnated.

Marchi said he wants more time to study the files, Silverstone recounted. But it appeared to him that the Immigration Department was not actively pursuing the files.

"As seems to have been the case for the last 40 to 50 years, the departmental people are not as engaged with his matter as they should be," Silverstone said. "We're not going to let this matter go. It's not going to be acceptable for nothing to happen."

Since the Criminal Code was amended in 1987 to allow for the prosecution of war crimes suspects, only four criminal cases have been launched. The Crown dropped charges in three and only one case, involving Imre Finta, led to a full trial. Finta was acquitted on all charges.

In its seven years of existence, the war crimes unit has registered only one success. That came in the case of former Nazi collaborator Jacob Luitjens who was stripped of his citizenship and deported to his native Holland.

In other developments, the Supreme Court of Canada has turned down a request from a group of Montreal synagogues that it clarify aspects of its decision in the Finta case.

The High Court turned down the request without giving reasons. In June it had rejected a similar appeal from the Crown and Jewish groups which had been interveners in the case.

The seven synagogues, which called themselves the Coalition of Concerned Congregations, asked the Supreme Court to either rehear the case or issue supplementary reasons.

Teachers strive to keep Holocaust memory alive

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Thomas Lutz prefaces his comments on the Holocaust with the announcement that his father was a German army officer during World War II.

Janice Keil, for her part, is upfront about her German Catholic background.

But the two teachers, who between them have devoted 20 years to understanding the impact of the Holocaust, are just as forthright about their commitment to making sure it doesn't happen again.

Keil, a 35-year-old Ontario native completing her master's degree in divinity at the University of Toronto, is taking the Holocaust into separate school classrooms when she resumes her teaching career this September.

The 37-year-old Lutz, in Toronto recently as part of a two-week North American lecture tour, works with more than 60 memorial museums in Germany, helping them to plan exhibits and undertake research on Nazi crimes.

Both believe in keeping the memory of the Holocaust alive through education.

Lutz points to the more than 700,000 visitors who have streamed through Berlin's Prince Albrecht Terrain exhibit as proof of Germany's desire to confront its Nazi past.

The Topography of Terror exhibit, housed in the former Gestapo and SS headquarters, was first mounted temporarily in 1987. Unprecedented public interest led the Berlin and federal governments to make it permanent. The exhibit will move to a new home complete with research centre, library, classrooms and archives in 1997.

Thomas Lutz

Janice Keil

"If you don't speak about your crimes, you cannot speak about your victims," Lutz says. "Germany has changed in the last 50 years. Not all of it is good, but there has been progress."

Sipping tea in a Toronto hotel, Lutz says the most important development has been the coordination of research and memorialization between the once-divided East and West Germany.

Before the Berlin Wall fell in 1989, Lutz says, West Germany maintained the majority of memorialization sites. East Germany remembered only those whose deaths illustrated its political agenda. "The communist resistance movement was viewed as a heritage of the new socialist state," he says.

Now, Germany is memorializing all Nazi victims — Jews, gypsies, political prisoners, homosexuals, the handicapped, prisoners of war. Joint work on the 1,604 German incarceration sites is underway, he reports with twinkling eyes. "Both states ideologically came together."

It was welcome news for audiences at U of T and York University. Prof. Mark Webber of York's German Studies Program was impressed with Lutz' research and conclusions. "The Holocaust isn't a topic we shy away from. We deal with it all the time," Webber said. "[But Lutz] brought up new stuff that I hadn't thought of."

Keil has been studying the Holocaust ever since she spent three years studying and living in Germany in the mid 1980s. There, near Mannheim, Keil says she met her first anti-Semite, a hotel worker who blamed the Holocaust on Jewish stubbornness.

"He said, 'In 1933, we warned them but they didn't listen. It's their fault they got killed.' I didn't know how to answer him."

Her search for answers led to a three-week Holocaust studies course at Jerusalem's Yad Vashem this past summer. She paid $1,000 of the $3,500 course herself, said Miriam Gelbloom, co-chair of the sponsoring Canadian Society for Yad Vashem. "Janice is a very committed individual who is Catholic. It is very important for us to have the support and understanding from this segment [of society]."

Keil is aware her background may make her good intentions seem suspect. Sitting in the quiet student lounge of the Jesuit-run Regis College, Keil admits that "the history of contempt by the Roman Catholic Church towards the Jewish people culminated in the Holocaust."

She uses her hands to emphasize a point. "We as Christians should feel guilty," she says. "We have to adopt a different way of looking at the Jewish people and at Judaism. We need to ask for forgiveness ... to recognize what we have done wrong but not to leave it at that."

Keil knows where she will take it: to the 104,899 students enrolled in Metro's 226 separate schools. She wants them to learn about the Holocaust in elementary school, "and to learn about Jewish life before the Holocaust. Grade 11 is too late."

THE NON-JEW IN THE REFORM SYNAGOGUE
A public discussion of a controversial issue

With the growing rate of intermarried families in the U.S. and Canada, the status of the non-Jew within the synagogue has changed: from an honoured visitor, therefore essentially an "outsider", to a member of a Jewish family, therefore a kind of "insider".

Many wish to ignore the issue, while others want to place it only within Reform synagogues. Some call for proscribed roles and rights for non-Jews, others seek to draw boundaries, claiming that otherwise a blurring of Judaism and a secularized Christianity results. But all are vexed — and none can afford to pretend away this issue and its implications.

Monday, January 16, 8 p.m.
Rabbi Alexander Schindler
Heads Reform Judaism in the U.S. and Canada. He recently raised the question of redefining the role of non-Jews in the synagogue.

Monday, January 23, 8 p.m.

Extended Family

Licensed staff go through extensive training before they are allowed to direct a funeral at Benjamin's. They must first be thoroughly immersed in our ways and the countless acts that distinguish our services. The discipline they learn is that at a highly sensitive time, no detail may be left to take care of itself.

It is remarkable that every senior director who makes arrangements with families has worked with Benjamin's for at least 18 years. After being with us for so long, they are more than knowledgeable, helpful, comforting professionals. They've become like an extension of the Benjamin family. By all competitive standards, this is an impressive and reassuring qualification.

We are proud of all our directors and the way they uphold our traditions. They are Greg Gates, Pam Head, Phil Belanger, Robert Coddington, Paul Weaver, Larry Scheinman, Lisa Cook and Margo Stevenson.

In the old days, family cared for the body until burial. That's still true at Benjamin's today.

Discussing God with your kids

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Rabbi David Wolpe

TORONTO — Although it would be easier to avoid the subject of God, Rabbi David Wolpe believes that parents must address the subject with their children.

The Conservative rabbi, who teaches at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles and whose most recent book is Teaching Your Children About God, discussed the topic as part of the Issues & Insights lecture series run by the New Leadership division of Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University. About 150 people attended the lecture at Beth Tzedec Congregation.

One reason for discussing God with children is to give them a firm basis for self-esteem, the rabbi believes. Self-esteem based on looks, grades or relationships can change, but "if you want to give self-esteem that doesn't change, base it on [the idea that your children] are in the image of God."

The rabbi believes that not teaching children that lesson deprives them of spiritual and moral benefit.

When children ask why they should be good, Rabbi Wolpe suggests telling them, "Because you are in the image of God and in order to realize your potential, you have to treat God's children the same way I want you to be treated — with dignity, kindness and love."

He pointed out the pitfalls of common answers such as "What if everyone were bad?" which avoid the child's specific question, and telling children they will feel better about themselves if they are good, which could backfire. "The child could well discover that sometimes you're good and you feel lousy."

Part of the problem is that parents are not always sure what they believe, said Rabbi Wolpe. He recommends that parents be honest about their beliefs.

"You don't have to tell them you believe in something you don't, but don't feed them all your doubts. Say it's something you think about, struggle with. Ask them what they think. Who knows? Maybe you'll learn something."

Language does present a barrier, Rabbi Wolpe believes. "If I say, 'God loves you,' it doesn't sound like a rabbi. It sounds like a priest, but not because God's love is not a Jewish concept. It's because 'God's love' is an English phrase. It sounds Christian, and that's the gospel truth."

When you say the same thing in Hebrew, he noted, it doesn't sound Christian any more.

He advises parents to broach the subject of God with their children. Even in non-religious homes, they will have thought about it, he said.

He credits youngsters with being able to understand that God, like love, is intangible. "They can't point to love. Love is everywhere, but children don't think it's under the dresser."

Rabbi Wolpe recommended "infusing a sense of God in whatever ritual you do, [to invoke] more than a cultural custom but a sense of sanctity."

The next Issues & Insights program is Judaism and Sexual Behavior: A Debate on the Controversial 1994 Rabbinical Assembly Report on Human Sexuality with panelists Rabbi Elliot Dorff, author of the report, and Rabbi David Novak of the Union for Traditional Judaism. Rabbi Baruch Frydman-Kohl will be moderator. It takes place Jan. 23 at Beth Tzedec.

Top shaliach promotes continuity

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Shlomo Gravetz, chair of the Youth and Hechalutz department of the World Zionist Organization's (WZO's) Joint Authority for Jewish Zionist Education and head of shlichim in 400 communities around the world, still views himself primarily as an educator.

That is why the former high school teacher and principal meets with young people whenever he travels abroad.

To promote Jewish continuity at a time when it is easy for Jews to assimilate, Gravetz, 48, is determined to increase the number of young people going to Israel.

Even if a young Jew visits Israel only for a short time, it will strengthen his or her Jewish identity and reduce the chances of intermarriage, he said in a recent interview at Toronto's Israel Aliyah Centre.

He disputes Israeli deputy foreign minister Yossi Beilin's proposed agency to accomplish this goal. "If we have so much money to establish new organizations, let's do what we can with what we have," Gravetz said.

Shlomo Gravetz

A former shaliach himself, who did a three-year stint in South Africa for Betar during the 1970s, Gravetz stresses the importance of Israeli shlichim, who bring "authentic Israeli atmosphere" to Diaspora communities. Canada has 50 WZO shlichim, including teachers.

During the summer of 1993, almost 6,500 young people, among them 670 Canadians, participated in Israel Experience programs through the Youth and Hechalutz Department, according to statistics provided by the Montreal office of the WZO. This year 500 Canadians participated in Israel Experience programs offered by the Canadian Zionist Federation.

The numbers reached a height of 1,000 in 1987, but dropped to 500 when the intifadah began the following year. Gravetz maintains that Israel "is more secure than America," and believes encouraging youngsters is necessary to reach the "grass roots" of the community. His department is now working on a North American partnership to attain that goal, he said.

He wants young Jews to "decide for themselves about their own future — hopefully a Jewish future."

"It's not only a matter of conviction of the leadership. The [North] American Jewish community is not connected to Jewish tradition. It's dangerous.

"How can we ensure the future of our children?" asks Gravetz. "And I mean it when I say 'our' children. We are all responsible for each other."

Ohr Somayach rabbi to run education program

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Los Angeles native Rabbi Les Fried is the latest addition to Toronto Ohr Somayach's outreach efforts.

Rabbi Fried makes no secret about his enthusiasm to be here, calling Toronto a "terrific city," with "all the energy of other big North American cities."

Rabbi Les Fried

Contrary to the reputation of Toronto's Jewish community as being "standoffish," he says that he, his wife, Riki, and four children, ranging in age from 11 years to 8 months, have found it "exceedingly hospitable and friendly."

The organization of community structures and the level of involvement here seems impressive, he says, but "that shouldn't blind us to the reality that there are many that don't have strong identification with the community but who are interested."

While Rabbi Fried will take an active role in the general activities of Ohr Somayach, his particular responsibility will be to organize the Jewish Learning Exchange, a new educational program located in the Spadina and Lonsdale area of Forest Hill.

"I hope to address the spiritual and intellectual needs of the unaffiliated," or those with minimal association with the community, he told The CJN in a recent interview.

Jewish continuity and involvement has always been a concern of the 39-year-old rabbi, although he did not start out his working life in that field.

After graduating from UCLA law school, he practiced law for 10 years. "I still keep up my membership in the bar," he says, with just a hint of nostalgia.

But the pull of working for Jewish continuity proved too strong, and he left his profession to work as associate director of the Jewish Studies Institute, an educational outreach program sponsored jointly by Yeshiva University at Los Angeles and the Simon Wiesenthal Centre.

Wanting to immerse himself in serious Torah learning, he went to Israel, where he studied at Ohr Somayach and Aish Hatorah, where he received smicha (rabbinic ordination).

Returning to the United States with his new wife, he became Hillel director at the University of California in Davis and then at Princeton University.

This fall, looking for a "more suitable place for a growing family to live, and more opportunities for outreach work on a larger scale," he moved to Toronto.

Jewish affiliation, he believes, should be "informed, relevant and vital. People should see that Judaism has a lot to offer their lives."

His goal, he says, is to "increase Jewish consciousness; to impart knowledge and skills people can at least be armed with" in the secular world. This will both nurture Jewish identity, and enable it to be passed on to the next generation.

Rabbi Fried has a vision of a Jewish renaissance in learning. "We shouldn't just try to maintain the status quo — we should aim for something higher."

Lithuanian emigree reunited with mom

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

Tamara Rubinova (left) with Berta Bromberg, the mother she hadn't seen in 50 years. [Ron Csillag]

TORONTO — If truth is stranger than fiction, it can also be more bittersweet. Just ask Tamara Rubinova.

The 55-year-old emigree from Vilnius, Lithuania, is torn between two mothers: the one that adopted her in 1945 and still lives in Vilnius, and the one in North York — Berta Bromberg, the biological mother she had not seen in nearly 50 years until an emotional reunion earlier last month.

"I have a pain in my heart," Rubinova told The CJN through an interpreter. "I have two mothers but my family is split."

Rubinova and her husband have applied for refugee status in Canada, hoping to join Bromberg, a half-brother and a half-sister and make a life in Toronto. An economist by training, Rubinova longs for the day when her three children and 82-year-old adoptive mother will also come here and form one big, happy family.

Rubinova's story is rich and complex, mirroring the experiences of many post-war Jews from eastern Europe.

She was born in Moscow in 1939 when Bromberg was 22. As an infant, she was placed in a nursery before being evacuated to a summer camp outside the Soviet capital.

When the Nazis invaded in June 1941, her father was drafted. Tamara and the other children at her camp were evacuated to Siberia. Bromberg fled with an older daughter to the remote eastern region of Samarkand.

Eighteen months later, Tamara and her mother were reunited. It was after Bromberg had been notified her husband was killed in action.

In 1942, Bromberg remarried. But two years later, her husband returned; his death notice had been a clerical error. He and Bromberg divorced and he received custody of young Tamara.

When the war ended, Bromberg, her daughter and new husband left Russia for Poland, leaving Tamara with her father, who neglected her. Tamara was placed in an orphanage and adopted in 1945. Three years later, the family moved to Lithuania.

Here's where the story takes a hairpin twist.

In 1953, Tamara's adoptive father died. Five years after that, her biological father located her in Vilnius and wound up marrying her adoptive mother, a union that ended in divorce in 1962.

Meanwhile, Bromberg and her growing clan had made aliyah. In 1980, after the death of her oldest daughter, Bromberg moved to Canada, joining her two children from her second marriage.

Throughout the upheavals, Bromberg, now 77, never forgot her lost daughter.

In fact, Bromberg and her eldest daughter corresponded with Rubinova until 1967, when links between Israel and the Communist world were severed after the Six Day War.

As for Rubinova, anti-Semitism eventually spurred her to leave Lithuania. After the nation won independence in 1991, she says she experienced "constant" harassment from co-workers, neighbors and even strangers. "Patriotic" slogans of "Jews — go to your own country" and "leave the Jews for us, we will finish them ourselves" were prominently displayed at public rallies.

At work, she received remarks like "Are you still here?" and "What smells in here?" She was twice injured by rock-throwing gangs and her daughter was humiliated while at camp.

In 1991, Rubinova moved with part of her family to Israel. There, she discovered her mother's Canadian address and contact was made.

But back in Vilnius, her adoptive mother — the only mother she really remembers — was ailing. Rubinova and her husband returned to care for her. The couple was greeted with aggressive anti-Semitic remarks, now accompanied by smashed windows and graffiti on their front door. The police, she says, did nothing.

The final straw came when Rubinova, who was working in a bank, was fired for speaking Russian. The couple sold some belongings and came to Canada.

Today, Rubinova says flatly, Lithuania's 5,000-member Jewish community "has no future."

These days find Bromberg and Rubinova catching up on the last 50 years. Asked what she said to her daughter at Toronto's airport when the two were reunited, Bromberg chokes slightly and recalls, "I shouted, 'Come to me, my baby.' "

Victoria JNF dinner to fete businessman

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

Mel Cooper

VICTORIA — Mel Cooper, a prominent British Columbia businessman and community leader, will be the honoree at the Jewish National Fund (JNF) Negev Dinner to be held in Victoria at the Empress hotel on March 26.

The president of Radio Stations C-FAX in Victoria, CKOV and CKLZ-FM in Kelowna and Seacoast Sound, a music production company, Cooper has been honored for services and public commitment to Victoria's ethnic community with a Canada Day Award for "outstanding contribution to the quality of life."

Mel Kotler, of Kelowna, the principal organizer of the Okanagan Jewish Community (OJC) and a close friend of Cooper's, calls Cooper "a wonderful friend of the Jewish community — always ready to help promote fundraising projects through his radio stations and personally as a speaker. If someone needs advice or assistance for a fundraising drive, a charity promotion or anything to benefit the community at large, he somehow finds time to lend a helping hand."

Cooper has received a number of awards for his contributions to community life, including the Order of Canada and the Order of British Columbia.

Mel Kotler, chair of the JNF Pacific region's small communities division, says Cooper helped greatly in raising funds for the OJC community centre and shul. He officiated at dinners, served as an auctioneer and was involved in other activities to promote the OJC drive. He was master of ceremonies at Kelowna's first-ever Negev Dinner last year.

Gadi Yacobi, Israel's ambassador to the United Nations, is scheduled to be the principal speaker at the Victoria dinner — the third one to be held here. Peter Legge of Vancouver will be master of ceremonies.

Previous Victoria honorees were April Katz and Howie Siegel.

Cooper was born in Newfoundland and raised on Signal Hill, in the shadow of the Cabot Tower, where Marconi received the first radio signal.

Stephanie Gilbert and David Katz, with assistance from Kotler, are co-chairing the Negev Dinner.

JAK P assists in growing Jewishly

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rebbetzin Lori Palatnik summed up the entire contents of a recent talk with an acronym — JAK P.

The Toronto educator and author discussed Being Jewish — It's Not All or Nothing at the second annual women's day presented by Aish HaTorah Women's Division at Baycrest Terrace.

Rebbetzin Lori Palatnik

The title of her talk only represented one aspect of the "four things everyone should know when they're growing Jewishly," Palatnik said.

The "J" in JAK P. is a reminder that you can't judge another person, but you can judge actions. "Only G-d can judge the essence of the person. You don't know what challenges and opportunities others have had."

The solution is "purposeful love," said Palatnik. "Look at each person and focus in on their virtues and what's good about them."

Another aspect of judgment is that, according to Pirkei Avot (Ethics of Our Fathers), it's forbidden to judge yourself, said Palatnik. "You're a person too."

"A" is for It's Not All or Nothing.

"People say, 'If I can't do all the mitzvahs, I might as well not do any,' or 'It's hypocritical for me to light Shabbos candles and then drive to a movie,' " said Palatnik.

"This is not a Jewish idea. Every mitzvah you do, every kindness — G-d knows about. Every mitzvah you do is for eternity."

Palatnik advised women to believe in their ideals and work toward them.

The third principle Palatnik discussed ("K") was that "it's better to know and not to do than not to know."

An Aish HaTorah student stopped taking classes after years of study because she felt guilty that she wasn't putting her knowledge into practice, said Palatnik. This is not a Jewish idea, she emphasized.

"Knowledge does lead to action, but even if it doesn't, you don't know which one part may have seeped in that you may pass to your kids or that will affect a decision you make in the future. The Talmud says, 'Seek learning like you seek money.' "

The final cornerstone (the "P" of JAK P.) addresses the questions, "Why were we created?" and "What is life all about?"

The surprising answer is pleasure, said Palatnik. (Procreation, prayer and the preservation of life were among audience guesses.)

Work towards ideals

"G-d created us for pleasure. Gan Eden (the Garden of Eden) means the garden of pleasure."

Palatnik noted that pleasure and pain are not mutually exclusive, citing marriage, children and working for the community as "our deepest, most meaningful pleasures" which may be accompanied by pain.

The workshop was one of three concurrent sessions designed for women at varying levels of observance. The other two were The Jewish Holidays — Is There a Rhyme or Reason to Them?, led by Rebbetzin Dina Coopersmith, and Prayer — Our Connection to G-d, led by Chumi Friedberg. Keynote speakers for the program, entitled Enjoy Life! It's a Gift to Treasure, were Rabbi Ezriel Tauber and Tova Mordechai.

Barrett says Quebec will reject sovereignty

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — A former federal politician has predicted Quebecers will vote 60-40 against sovereignty and separation.

Dave Barrett, former NDP member of Parliament for Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca, made his prediction at a maximum capacity meeting of the Jewish Community Centre men's luncheon group.

Barrett, the first and only Jewish premier of British Columbia, told The CJN that since Canada "is still an adolescent country, . . Quebec has gone through a number of phases of turmoil," of which separation is one.

"Quebecois will decide the future of Quebec," he said. "They're not fools."

Barrett, who was born and raised in Vancouver, lost his seat in 1993 to Reform MP Keith Martin. He has been touted as a possible successor to British Columbia Lt.-Gov. David Lam, who retires in March.

Amcha helps Holocaust survivors living in Israel

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Israel has the largest concentration of Holocaust survivors in the world — some 300,000 people, or about two-thirds of the world's total.

Of those, according to a 1988 survey, 15-20 per cent have two or more lingering psychological symptoms which require treatment or support.

From that data, one can glean the following conclusions: that survivors, for the most part, are a remarkably resilient and well-adjusted group, and that the vast majority of them do not use the services of Amcha.

That does not faze John Lemberger, the director of Amcha, Israel's pioneer service catering to the psychosocial needs of Holocaust survivors and their children.

Founded in Jerusalem in 1987, Amcha has grown to four branches throughout Israel and provides a variety of programs for the survivors who need them.

In Toronto recently to drum up support for Amcha and essentially to start up a Canadian Friends group, Lemberger conceded that while most survivors in Israel do without the organization, its work is steadily growing, as survivors age and problems finally emerge.

He also stressed that his group is not to be confused with the New York-based Coalition for Jewish Concerns/Amcha, headed by activist Rabbi Avi Weiss.

John Lemberger

Lemberger's Amcha is described by its full name: the National Israeli Centre for Psychosocial Support of Survivors of the Holocaust and the Second Generation.

Amcha, Hebrew for "our people," has another meaning. It was the code word European Jews used to identify one another during World War II.

Amcha's major thrust, Lemberger told The CJN, is direct psychotherapy, provided to about 1,100 people in branches in Jerusalem, Ramat Gan, Haifa and Beersheva. Survivors' symptoms, already well documented, include fear of loss, separation or of authority; suppressed rage; feelings of guilt; and smothering children with love and over-protectiveness. They may experience problems with intimacy and communication. Sometimes, a survivor can bear to be silent no longer. Trauma is often transferred to the second generation.

Current events can trigger terrifying fear. Lemberger said Amcha was "inundated" with emergency calls during the Gulf War and business jumps with each act of Arab terror in Israel, but "we haven't peaked yet. We don't know when the deluge will come."

Other services include discussion groups, sometimes with survivors' children; clubs for those seeking a social setting with other survivors; compiling oral histories, which Lemberger said many find therapeutic in and of themselves; and volunteer visits to homebound or institutionalized survivors.

Provides support services

There are also support services, including discussion groups and use of psychodrama, for the estimated 700,000 children of survivors in Israel. Almost half of all Amcha clients who seek therapy are members of the second generation, Lemberger noted. Their symptoms often mirror those of their parents.

Amcha, with a staff of 100 psychologists, social workers and consultants, also runs training courses for caregivers at Bar-Ilan University and Tel Aviv University.

And it is cash-strapped. This year's operating budget is 5 million shekels, expected to grow to 6 million next year. Just 12 per cent of funds come from Israel's treasury, 20 per cent from client fees and the rest from donations. Those come mainly from governments, individuals and companies in Holland and, ironically, in Germany and Austria.

For more information on Amcha, call Sarah Faerman at (416) 785-2500, ext. 2580.

Avoiding diabetes complications

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Lowering and maintaining blood glucose levels at normal range has been proved to dramatically reduce the frequency and severity of complications of type I (juvenile, or insulin-dependent) diabetes, a recent study has proved.

Dr. Bernard Zinman, director of the Banting & Best Diabetes Centre at the University of Toronto said the results of the Diabetes Control and Complications Trial (DCCT) were so startling that the study was ended one year early, in order to encourage patients to follow its tenets — and governments to fund treatment.

Zinman was giving the annual Peter J. Laurie Memorial Lecture of the Toronto chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation Canada, held recently at the Delta Chelsea Inn.

DCCT was a project funded by the National Institutes of Health in the United States. Three Canadian centres were involved in the study: the University of Toronto, the University of British Columbia and the University of Western Ontario.

The study, which began in 1982, divided participants into three groups. Of the two who had shown no signs of complications, one group treated their diabetes conventionally, taking insulin once or twice a day and using daily self monitoring, diet and exercise education, measurement of long-term glucose levels and quarterly medical visits.

Dr. Bernard Zinman

The second group used intensive treatment, with three or more injections of insulin a day (or use of an insulin pump), four or more blood glucose tests daily, frequent dietary instruction, monthly clinic visits and hospitalization for initiation of this therapy.

The third group, who did show early signs of complications, were all given the intensive therapy.

Eye, kidney and nerve complications were found to be prevented or significantly less severe in over 50 to 70 per cent of cases, Zinman said.

Contrary to what some might expect, Zinman said the increased care and medical attention did not affect either the participants' behavior or quality of life.

The only adverse effect of the intensive therapy, he said, was the increased incidence of hypoglycemia, that is, blood glucose levels low enough enough to require the assistance of another person.

Current research is trying to establish proper control, without increasing the susceptibility to hypoglycemia, a balance which would vary with each patient.

Increasingly sophistocated technology and knowledge are helping the situation, Zinman said, citing particularly easier methods of giving insulin; better informed and motivated patients; strong support groups, both professional and family; and self blood glucose monitoring, which he called "the most important advance since insulin."

Zinman noted that the U. K. Prospective Diabetes Study, which will report before the end of this decade, is studying whether intensive therapy is also effective for type II, or non-insulin dependent diabetes.

There are other risk factors for diabetic complications the doctor said, including high blood pressure, smoking and increased lipid levels.

A new drug, nicotinimide, is being studied as a possible preventative for those at risk of developing diabetes, he said.

The evening also featured draws for four prizes, including a trip around the world.

Western Bonds gets new director

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Longtime community lay leader Norman Franks has been appointed executive director for Western Canada of State of Israel Bonds, a new position, effective Jan. 1.

As a volunteer, Franks served for five years as Bonds campaign chair for Vancouver.

In his new role, he will oversee the Bonds offices in Calgary and Winnipeg and be responsible for all of Canada west of the Manitoba capital.

The appointment was announced by Morris Wosk, national vice-president, who said Franks has been responsible for generating some $5 million in sales in his Miracle Mitzvah program of the last four campaigns.

As regional director, Franks joins the ranks of other professional directors: Larry Waller in Toronto and Erol Araf in Montreal.

Born and educated in Vancouver, Franks graduated from the University of British Columbia with a bachelor of commerce in 1963 and became a chartered accountant in 1966.

Franks was on the board of Beth Israel synagogue for 10 years and has been active with the Variety Club of British Columbia for over 20 years.

He told The CJN plans for Bonds in Western Canada include the introduction of RRSP eligibility of Bonds instruments in self-directed plans. Emphasis on this phase of campaigning will be made in December, January and February. Major community events are scheduled for May.

Franks and his wife Marlene have been married for over 30 years and have three children.

Marathon training to start

TORONTO — Marathon Dynamics will begin its 18-week training clinic for the 1995 Shoppers Drug Mart Toronto Marathon Jan. 9 at Bessborough Public School in Leaside.

Trainers Paul Vacirca and Michael Brennan will run the Monday night program to help participants get ready for the May 7 marathon.

"We've designed our clinic for those people who have always dreamed of running their first marathon, as well as anyone who wants to improve their marathon time," Vacirca said.

The marathon is 26.2 miles, or 42.2 km. Clinic participants receive a guidebook, running logbook and T-shirt.

Brennan has run 32 marathons, a 50-mile ultramarathon and has eight years of sports training experience. Vacirca has run a marathon in 2 hours and 37 minutes.

For more information, contact Vacirca at (416) 483-0501 or Brennan at (416) 250-0552.

Starting smart in business with help

By JACK KOHANE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — For those re-evaluating their careers in the face of a tight job market, the answer may be just a phone call away.

Start Smart is a new program for budding entrepreneurs to learn about the self-employment market and how to be successful at it.

Sponsored by Human Resources Development Canada, a federal agency, and co-ordinated by Self-Employment Development Initiatives, Start Smart is conducted by Jewish Vocational Services of Metropolitan Toronto (JVS) in partnership with Immigrant Women's Job Placement Centre and Sherwood & Associates.

Kay Saunders, JVS' associate director of rehabilitation services and special projects, said Start Smart began as a pilot project in 1992 with a limited enrolment and funding from the Endowment Fund of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

"The first two groups that graduated from the Start Smart program . . . have since generated over $3 million into the local economy," she said.

While unique in large urban centres such as Toronto, such community-based projects have been tested in depressed areas like northern Ontario with equally promising results.

Building on that experience, Start Smart offers North York applicants intensive 8- and 10-week business counselling courses. For a full year following their graduation, JVS counsellors monitor their progress, do on-site inspections and provide ongoing support for any difficulties that may arise.

Participants continue to receive their Unemployment Insurance benefits for the duration of their enrolment.

Training consultant Eileen Sherwood recognizes the need for Start Smart. "We help entrepreneurs turn their ideas into successful business ventures."

A former financial loans officer, Sherwood knows what lending institutions expect before investing in a small business. She tells participants about marketing strategies, how to prepare and stick to projected budgets, accounting basics and gives advice on realistic income potentials.

Each Start Smart 20-member class is totally interactive, where participants are encouraged to network with others working towards similar goals.

One newly self-employed graduate, 30-year-old Michael Armstrong, is already well on the way to success with his company, Wall Works. Armstrong, an artist, creates custom wall murals for children's rooms, recreation areas and swimming pools.

"My previous training was in graphic arts and industrial design, but I was unable to find work in this field," Armstrong said. "Start Smart showed me how to get started in my own business, how to advertise my services, and managing income versus costs. They instilled a confidence that has spurred me to act on my ideas. Now I'm devoting my energy and creativity into an area that I love. And I can rely on JVS counsellors to give me additional guidance as my business grows and prospers."

As Saunders explains, large corporations are downsizing through attrition and hiring freezes. Self-employment could be the wave of the future. "Start Smart is a beginning towards that end."

Contact the Canada Employment Centre for more information about the Self Employment Assistance Program.

Taking stock

By GEOFFREY M. CLEIN
Special to The CJN

JERUSALEM — An exciting development over the past decade has been the rapid growth of the stock markets of developing countries.

Since the beginning of 1994, the weekly magazine The Economist has been including Israel in its regular survey of emerging markets.

There is no conclusive definition of what constitutes an emerging market. One definition includes only those markets which have started the process of expansion of their economy in terms of increased capacity and technological sophistication.

Another uses a broader definition which embraces all developing countries, based on the underlying assumption that all have the potential for economic growth in the near future.

The World Bank has adopted the broader definition of emerging markets, i.e., sweeping inclusion of all developing countries. It bases its definition on Gross National Product (GNP) per capita. The World Bank considers countries with low or moderate per capita income ($636-$7,910) to be emerging economies.

Can the definition of an emerging economy be applied to Israel? As Israel's economy has been growing at a high rate for a number of years, it meets the central criterion of most definitions. On the other hand, per capita income of about $13,000 prevents Israel from formally being considered an emerging market.

Israel's stock goes up with global investors

The international investor seeks investment opportunities in countries with strong and long-term potential for growth — and profit. From this perspective, Israel is highly attractive to the foreign investor. Israel is regarded in much the same way as Hong Kong and Singapore, both significant emerging markets, despite their high per-capita incomes ($19,000 and $17,000, respectively).

Like many emerging markets, Israel suffered hyper-inflation during the early 1980s, which, at its height, exceeded 400 per cent per year. Economic and financial systems stopped functioning properly.

These untenable conditions gave birth to a new economic order in the mid-1980s. The first goal, of course, was reining in inflation by drastic reduction of the budget deficit and the capital market.

These processes gave birth to a string of economic reforms in the shares and bonds markets, in taxation, foreign currency, and privatization of state-owned companies, as well as in institutional savings, insurance, supervision and regulatory authorities, limitation of monopolies and more.

From the reformation phase of the second half of the 1980s, the Israeli economy entered a rapid-growth phase in the early 1990s which was amplified by the waves of immigration from the former Soviet Union.

Today, a third phase is in full swing: rapid growth which is being nourished by the peace process and the change in Israel's international political and economic status. Evidence of this can be found in the gradual diminishing of damage caused by the Arab boycott and the opening of new export markets.

Between 1980 and 1991, Israel's Gross National Product grew at an annual rate of 3.7 per cent. Only Japan and Taiwan achieved higher growth rate during this period. The highest figures came in 1991 and 1992 where growth was over 6 per cent per annum.

The relatively low 1993 level (3.5 per cent) was still higher than those of the West. This was due mostly to the cancellation of building projects that historically had been subsidized by the government. Even with this change, industrial production finished up by 6.6 per cent for the year.

Rapid growth tied to peace

Growth estimates for the Israeli economy in coming years range from five to seven per cent, depending on progress in the peace process. Accordingly, Israel meets the most important criterion for an emerging market, economic growth. In this context, the seeming drawback of high per capita income is transformed into a strong advantage, compared to the emerging markets.

The growth expected here is based on the industrial sector, which boasts such rich technologically advanced human resources and infrastructure that it competes successfully and credibly within the international marketplace.

Many investment companies point to the potential which Israel holds by virtue of its high-quality, professional work force and the level of investment in research and development (R&D). Israel annually devotes three per cent of GDP to R&D — a rate which is high even in comparison with the most advanced Western economies. Annual production figures for workers all over the world have Israelis high on the list.

Israel excels in applied academic research, with more than twice as many published articles per capita as the United States. The immigration wave from the Commonwealth of Independent States (the former Soviet Union) of the early 1990s increased Israel's population by more than 500,000.

Of the working population, over 60 per cent had degrees, primarily in engineering-related areas, as well as very high computer literacy levels. As their language skills advance and they become familiar with the workings of Israeli business life, more and more people are finding avenues into their own specialties.

Another factor seen in emerging markets which is obvious in Israel, is that the stock market has developed parallel to the growth in the economy. There are more publicly traded companies; and listings of Israeli companies on other stock markets have increased.

The impressive developments in both the economy and the capital market have generated growing interest among the international business community.

Tangible proof of this is visits to Israel by senior officers of American and European investment companies who are expressing open interest in Israel; some have either started funds specializing in Israel or are now doing so.

The current level of interest will increase significantly if conditions remain positive. As long as this holds, the question of whether Israel is or isn't an emerging market will be less and less important.

TIPS FROM PROS

By SONNY GOLDSTEIN

TORONTO — There are two things you must concern yourself if leaving the country: travel insurance, in case there is a medical emergency while you are away, and buying American money, which is still the currency of choice in most countries outside of Canada.

If you will be needing a few thousand dollars or more for a winter trip, buy it in stages, not all at once. You should buy about $1,000 each week starting about two months before you go away.

If in any week the cost is way down, you may want to buy more that week, or wait to see if it goes even lower the next week. By following this strategy, you will get a good average cost for US dollars.

If you use travellers cheques, try buying them through the Ontario Motor League. The league does not charge its members any fees or commissions for the single signature American Express cheques, and the exchange rate was at least $10 lower on $1,000 than the bank. The total savings on just $2,000 of American money is enough to pay for a membership, even if you don't drive a car.

As for travel insurance, this is one area where you may want to shop around. Here is what to look for.

Some banks and trust companies give you some coverage with their gold credit cards. This coverage is usually quite good, but generally is only for about 30 days. Many of you who are already retired might still have benefits from your former company's group plan, but many of these also have limitations for the duration of coverage. If you are going to be away for longer, supplement the coverage with an individual plan that starts when the other expires.

You must also determine how the plans define and treat pre-existing medical conditions. Some companies will exclude your health problem if you had treatment or changed your medication in the 90 days prior to departure.

Others will cover those conditions regardless of when they first occurred, but impose a deductible or a co-insurance factor, where you pay the first few hundred or few thousand dollars of any claim, or 20 per cent of the total claim. A few new insurers have popped up offering really low rates to very healthy people, and high rates to those with extensive medical histories. If you have never been sick a day in your life, you will save lots of money by seeking out one of those companies.

This is just a brief overview of what is out there. You will have to look around for yourself, but please, do not travel out of the province without medical insurance. Since OHIP has cut back on what it pays for out-of-province care, it could cost you a fortune to be sick or injured in a foreign country.

TORONTO — Americans have more money invested in mutual funds than they have in their savings accounts, and economists expect that Canadians will follow suit.

"It's going to happen by the year 2000," said Tammy Murray, vice-president of retail deposits and mutual funds at National Trust.

Although mutual funds have been available here for nearly four decades — in 1957 National Trust was one of the first Canadian financial institutions to offer them — they only began to take off in the past few years.

Low interest rates on Guaranteed Investment Certificates (GICs), media coverage of mutual funds, growing investor awareness and financial institutions themselves are responsible for the popularity of mutual funds in the past few years, she said.

Financial institutions have been advertising and distributing information about mutual funds, "alerting Canadians to the product," she said, adding that Canadians have become more knowledgeable about investments.

National Trust offers 11 Canadian, American and international mutual funds, and quite a few of them are 100 per cent RRSP (Registered Retirement Savings Plan) and RRIF (Registered Retirement Income Fund) eligible.

Canadian funds include a bond fund, made up of federal, provincial and municipal bonds, as well as high quality corporate bonds, and a Canadian equity fund which invests in common shares and securities convertible to common shares of medium to large Canadian corporations. National Trust has a Canadian balanced fund, whose primary investments are common stock and government bonds.

When interest rates first went up seven months ago, mutual funds went down. Some mutual fund investors despaired when they received their statements and learned that they had lost money on paper. Mutual funds are long-term investments that fluctuate in value, cautioned Murray. If you hold on to them, "chances are you will have better returns."

National Trust recently introduced three international funds that are not as sensitive to interest rates. The most volatile of them is an emerging markets fund that invests in developing countries such as Argentina and Indonesia.

Murray stressed that even an aggressive investor should not have more than 10 per cent of his or her portfolio in the emerging markets fund. "Generally with funds that fluctuate the most, you get the best rate of return. This is over a long period of time."

There are mutual fund advisors at National Trust to help customers analyse their financial situation and assist them in selecting the fund that is best for them.

National Trust's mutual fund units can be purchased for a minimum of $500 and subsequent investments can be as low as $50.

Those without the required minimum can buy units over time through the company's continuous purchase plan, providing that they make a contribution of at least $500 in the first year.

Investors get the benefits of dollar-cost averaging if they stay with the continuous purchase plan, since fixed, regular investments in a fund over a long period of time protect one's savings regardless of market conditions. For example, 40 units purchased at regular intervals might cost a total of $500, yet have a current market value of $550 as some of the units were purchased when the price was lower.

A book about mutual funds, written and illustrated by Ben Wicks, is available free at all National Trust branches. It is, said Murray, "a lighthearted explanation of mutual funds."

Chechen Jewish refugees flee to Israel

Jewish Telegraphic Agency and Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Dozens of Jewish refugees from the breakaway Russian republic of Chechnya are continuing to arrive in Israel on special flights organized by the Jewish Agency for Israel.

The latest group of 25 Chechen Jews touched down here Dec. 27. The group included three refugees from Grozny, the Chechen capital under siege by Russian troops since Dec. 11.

Earlier arrivals included 32 refugees now staying in hotels or with relatives and friends, Agency officials said.

During the past two months, the refugees have been fleeing the embattled Chechen province for the southern Russian city of Nalchik, where Jewish Agency emissaries are helping them obtain travel documents.

Agency officials said last week that 61 Chechen Jews are still in Nalchik. They are reportedly in poor health after escaping overland through the icy Caucausus mountains.

Contact cut off

About 40 Jewish families, comprising some 150 people, remain in Grozny. Contact has been cut off because of Russian shelling.

Baruch Gur, director of the Eastern Europe and former Soviet Union department at the Jewish Agency, said the agency had not encouraged the refugees to flee Chechnya.

"They came on their own. It's not a case where our emissaries went into the city to bring them," he said, adding that the local government of Nalchik "was very helpful in assisting to get the right documents to leave."

Emissaries in the Caucasian towns of Derbent, Makhahkala, Mineral-Nyevody and Pyatalgorsk have been told to look out for refugees.

The Jewish community in Chechnya once numbered 1,500. Most left for Israel during the past five years.

Those still there, according to Gur, have remained for personal reasons, including mixed marriages, old age, or because they do not want to abandon their property.

Shahal turns down cabinet post

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Amid a sharp public outcry, Israel's Police Minister, Moshe Shahal, last week turned down the post of information minister.

He announced his decision Tuesday, just two days after being given the appointment in a cabinet reshuffle.

On Sunday, in an effort to bring the breakaway faction of the right-wing Tsomet into the Labor-led coalition, the cabinet narrowly approved the appointment of Gonen Segev, leader of the Yi'ud faction, as energy minister.

The post was previously held by Shahal, who was given the information portfolio, a newly created cabinet position, to add to his position as head of the police ministry.

Several cabinet ministers said that having a police minister who is also information minister smacked of a totalitarian government.

Education Minister Amnon Rubinstein said the whole idea reminded him of something "straight out of 1984."

In a letter to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Shahal said he decided to turn down the post.

The decision, he said, came as a result of public criticism that the new Information Ministry was a waste of taxpayer's money and that his holding the post would be a conflict of interest with his responsibilities as police minister.

Rabin, who tried to persuade Shahal to change his mind, maintained that an information ministry was needed to communicate government policy to the public.

The Meretz Party, which had strongly opposed making Shahal information minister, welcomed his decision.

Yi'ud's addition to the coalition is expected to bolster Rabin, who until now has held 61 seats in the 120-seat Knesset, including five Arab Knesset members.

The Yi'ud agreement still requires Knesset approval.

Legal ruling expected on Efrat's expansion

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service and Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — A legal opinion was due this week on whether a controversial expansion of the West Bank Jewish settlement of Efrat can proceed.

Top lawyers from Israel's defence ministry and other government agencies held lengthy discussions last week on the legal aspects of a dispute over Efrat's expansion.

Attorney General Michael Ben-Yair was instructed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to prepare a formal opinion for the cabinet by this week.

Also last week, Israel's Supreme Court refused to order a halt to the expansion of Efrat. Some two dozen Arab landowners had asked the court to order an immediate stop to construction.

The court ordered another hearing in the near future.

At the same time, Ben-Yair and his team of experts were instructed to look into the legality of building 500 housing units on a 150-acre plot south of Bethlehem.

Palestinian residents of the nearby village of Al-Khader claimed they have proof the land belongs to them. And several Palestinian officials charged that such an expansion would violate the Palestinian self-rule accord.

Rabin was reported to have rejected the idea of simply declaring the region a "closed military area," which would have brought the construction to an end.

Rabin, whose role as defence minister gives him the legal right to close off any area in the territories on grounds of security or public order, apparently wanted to avoid resorting to such a move for what is, essentially, a political decision.

Since coming to power, the Rabin government has adopted a policy of freezing all government construction projects in the territories. But questions arose last week over what steps the government can take to stop construction if a private contractor has the building rights.

The issue was seen as a test of Rabin's willingness to risk a showdown with the 120,000 Jewish residents of Judea and Samaria.

Opposition parties introduced a no-confidence motion, following reports that Israel had told the PLO that the construction would be suspended.

In practice, the work continued at full pace, with Palestinian protesters maintaining a presence nearby, but not tangling with the soldiers at the site, as they did earlier in the week.

Peace Now scheduled a Jewish-Arab demonstration at the site last Friday.

For their part, settler leaders urged followers not to hold demonstrations but to rely on the army to protect the bulldozers from interference.

Meretz coalition members sided strongly with the Palestinians in calling for an immediate end to the construction.

"The government cannot act upon the diktat imposed by the Right," said Absorption Minister Yair Tzaban. "If we did and accepted their faits accomplis, we won't achieve peace."

He said that if it turns out the settlers are legally entitled to build, it would be preferable to compensate them rather than allow them to continue building.

NEW CHIEF OF STAFF

Maj.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak took over on Jan. 1 as the Israel Defence Force's new Chief of Staff for a four-year term, replacing Lt.-Gen. Ehud Barak. Shahak, who had been deputy Chief of Staff, recently headed the Israeli delegation that negotiated the Cairo self-rule accord with the Palestinians. Born in Tel Aviv in 1944, he joined the IDF as a paratrooper in 1962. In 1986, he was named head of the Intelligence Branch. In 1991, Shahak commanded Operation Solomon, the dramatic airlift of most of Ethiopia's remaining Jews. He will now be responsible for all security arrangements with Palestinians and perhaps Syria, and the possible evacuation of Jewish settlements in the territories. [Israel Photo]

Leading Sephardi rabbi dies of pneumonia

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — Solomon Gaon, the Chief Rabbi of congregations affiliated with the World Sephardi Federation, international spokesman for Sephardi Jews and world-renowned scholar on Sephardi Jewish history, died here Dec. 21. He was 82.

The cause of death was pneumonia.

Rabbi Gaon was born in Travnik, Yugoslavia, now part of Bosnia, and began his studies at the Yeshivah of Sarajevo.

After moving to England in 1934, he earned bachelor's and doctoral degrees from the University of London, and a minister's degree and rabbinic ordination from Jews' College in London.

He was a minister, and eventually senior minister, at London's Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue from 1944 to 1949. That year he was named Haham — Chief Rabbi — of the British Commonwealth's Spanish and Portuguese Congregations. He held the position until 1982.

He also founded Judith, Lady Montefiore College in London, which was a training college for Sephardi rabbis.

In 1962 he began a long affiliation with Yeshiva University in New York, establishing a host of academic programs and community activities related to the Sephardim.

He had been professor of Sephardi studies at Yeshiva U since 1976.

He served for a time as president of the Union of Sephardi Congregations of Canada and the United States.

In 1990, Rabbi Gaon was honored by the Spanish royal family on behalf of the world's Sephardi Jews.

The next year, he made an emotional return to his ancestral homeland in Aragon, five centuries after Jews were expelled from the Spanish region.

His son, Isaac Gaon, lives in Toronto.

Yemenite children died of disease in '50s: report

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — A government-appointed committee investigating the fate of hundreds of Yemenite children who disappeared in Israel during the 1950s has concluded that most of the children died of disease.

The children had been part of a massive airlift that brought tens of thousands of Yemenite Jews to Israel from 1948 to 1950.

Some leaders in the Yemenite community have alleged that Israeli authorities at the time abducted the children and sold them for adoption in Israel and abroad.

The committee, which conducted a six-year inquiry headed by retired Judge Moshe Shalgi, was formed amid pressure from the Yemenite community, which was unsatisfied with the outcome of a similar commission in 1967.

In March, about 10 heavily armed members of a Yemenite sect led by Rabbi Uzi Meshulam holed themselves up in a fortified house near Tel Aviv, protesting what they described as the "disappearance and sale of thousands of Yemenite children."

They were dispersed following a massive police operation, and several sect members were arrested in May.

In its 250-page report issued late last month, the committee said no evidence was found to substantiate any of the allegations against the government.

The committee investigated 505 cases. In all but 65, documents were found confirming the children's deaths, Shalgi said.

Pointing to the poor sanitary conditions that prevailed in immigrant camps at the time, Shalgi suggested that the 65 other children probably also died of illness.

"We didn't find any clue for criminal action or improper action towards the children through our investigations," he said.

One committee member took issue with the committee's findings and refused to sign it.

Yosef Yigal, whose sister Esther disappeared shortly after his family arrived in Israel, criticized the committee for not questioning the authenticity of the documents or examining any potential criminal angles.

After receiving the report, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin described the disputed disappearances as "one of the most painful periods in the history of the State of Israel."

Soviet Jewish population declining

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — The Jewish population of the former Soviet Union is dying, Jewish Agency Acting Chairman Yehiel Leket claimed last week, citing figures which show that of a total Jewish population of 1.3 million, there are only 115,000 children.

Experts forecast that only 500,000 Jews will remain in the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) at the turn of the century, Leket said.

He also revealed that since the former U.S.S.R. opened its doors, some 800,000 Jews have left, with 538,400 of those coming to Israel.

"For every two Jews who come to Israel, another one goes to some other destination in the West," Leket said.

He was speaking at a festive Zionist Executive meeting in Jerusalem marking five years of aliyah from the CIS.

Some 300,000 of those Jews remaining in the former Soviet Union are expected to make aliyah over the next five years, and another 200,000 to go to the West. Because of assimilation and negative population growth, about 500,000 others are expected to be lost to Judaism, Leket said.

The figures are based on a special survey conducted by the agency's CIS department.

The study shows a clear trend towards aging and assimilation, especially in the Slavic and Baltic states. The rate of mixed marriage is rising sharply, and the birthrate dropping steadily.

In 1988, for example, 73.2 per cent of Jewish men were married out of the faith and 62.8 per cent of Jewish women had intermarried.

In 1994, 80.000 people made aliya, he said, some 67,000 of them from the CIS, most of them from Moldova and Ukraine. The forecast for the coming year is for a similar number, Leket said.

Israel's chief rabbis urged to recognize Ethiopian Jews

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Government officials have called on Israel's chief rabbis to fully recognize Ethiopian Jews exactly 10 years after the first Operation Moses airlift to Israel.

"Find the courage to do this," Absorption Minister Yair Tsaban exhorted the chief rabbis, who have questioned the authenticity of the Ethiopians' Judaism.

"There is no other community as proud of their Jewishness as the Jews of Ethiopia," Tsaban said during an anniversary ceremony marking the 1984 operation in Jerusalem.

Operation Moses brought some 7,600 Ethiopian immigrants from Sudanese refugee camps to Israel during a 45-day period. Thousands more Ethiopians arrived in Israel in 1991 as part of Operation Solomon.

In marking the first Operation Moses night flight on Dec. 25, Israeli president Ezer Weizman stressed that the immigrants were overcoming difficulties in being absorbed into the daily and religious life of Israel.

The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee reported last week that Ethiopian immigrants who arrived in Israel during Operation Moses and throughout the 1980s have similar rates of employment as their Israeli-born counterparts.

Meanwhile, the debate continues over the immigration of those Jews remaining in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa.

Under a family reunification plan, the government has agreed to bring over relatives of those Ethiopians living in Israel. But Israeli Embassy officials in Addis Ababa have reported that thousands of Ethiopians, including non-Jews, have flocked to the capital in hopes of receiving permission to leave.

THE LEARNING FAMILY

Ulpan Akiva's Innovative program which encourages the shared family experience.

Families from all over the world, as well as from Israel, congregate at Ulpan Akiva's Green Beach Hotel campus, beside the beach in southern Netanya, for a unique family experience combining learning with leisure, enjoying all full-board accommodation. Parents and their teenage (over 12 years) children take a part in Hebrew or Arabic courses while in the summer, the younger kids join a day camp nearby (at Moshav Udim).

The families are joining a learning community of Israelis, tourists, temporary residents and new immigrants — Jews and non-Jews — students of all ages, civil servants, teachers on sabbatical and others.

The courses last 24 days or 8 weeks, with 5 hours of classes a day. Then there are loads of social and cultural activities during the remaining hours of the day and evening, plus walks, tours and a study Shabbat.

Cheaters' naughty couples are good fun in bad times

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Medina Theatre Ensemble inaugurated its new home in the Bloor JCC with Cheaters a lightweight comedy that gave its cast of six plenty of opportunity to emote.

As part of Bloor JCC's new emphasis on the arts, Medina produced Cheaters in the auditorium, which has a proscenium stage, no tiered seating and inadequate lighting.

Despite these handicaps, and abetted by a clever set design by Tanit Mendes, Medina put on a good show that improved as the play went on.

Written by U.S. playwright Michael Jacobs, the comedy involves two middle-aged couples whose plan to switch partners (without telling the other) goes awry when they discover that their children are living together and planning to marry.

One-liners

The script is reminiscent of Neil Simon's fondness for one-liners and superficial treatment of the middle class. But its escapist theme has an appeal in these bad news days and the opening night audience certainly enjoyed it.

As the two matrons reaching out for new partners, Gloria Valentine and Fran Elliot have contrasting acting styles — Valentine is a hard-hearted vamp, Elliot a sensitive woman looking for a sensitive man.

For their part, Barry Lipson and Murray Kash, the would-be errant husbands, are believable enough, but needed a little more subtlety in their delivery.

A failure to react emotionally deprived Daniel Hoffman's role of the tenderness expected of a young man in love, while the object of his desire, Michelle Goldstein, did the best she could under the circumstances.

Barry Minshull provided the off-stage voice of an evangelist. Cheaters was produced by Bill Emery.

Eye on Arts

By Bill Gladstone

"I didn't start out to become a writer," says Howard Engel. "That wasn't part of my plan. I got into writing through the side door."

Until 1980, Engel worked as a journalist, broadcaster, and producer for CBC-TV. Then, encouraged by his wife, Janet, he turned his hand to writing a mystery novel while recuperating from a car accident. The result was The Suicide Murders, featuring Benny Cooperman, a funny Jewish detective from the fictitious southern Ontario town of Grantham, modeled after St. Catharines, where Engel grew up. The book was an immediate popular success.

"I was trying to do what hadn't been done in the private eye tradition," says Engel, who has lived in Toronto for almost 30 years. "As far as I knew there weren't any Jewish private eyes in fiction, yet I knew there were quite a few Jewish private eyes in real life. I wanted somebody to take on the jobs that Sam Spade or Philip Marlowe would take on. I also wanted him connected to a family. You can't imagine Spade or Marlowe connected to a family."

Engel read several passages from his ninth Benny Cooperman novel, Getting Away With Murder (due for release from Penguin Books in July), at a recent Books and Bagels gathering at the Bloor Street Jewish Community Centre in Toronto.

"Before the Benny Cooperman books, the longest thing I had written was an 11-page poem on the Welland Canal," he told me afterwards. "So I'm sort of surprised by the success of the books, even after almost 15 years."

Last year, Engel published Murder in Montparnasse (Penguin, $6.99), a mystery novel set in Paris in the 1920s, and the first book he has written that does not feature Benny Cooperman. As well, he is currently researching a non-fiction account of hangmen and headsmen that the author calls "ghoulish fun." (The book is slated for publication under the Key Porter imprint next year as Behold The Lord High Executioner.)

Howard Engel

Might these other activities be taken as indications the author is tiring of Benny Cooperman? "Not at all," he says. "I'm not tempted to push him off Reichenbach Falls, as Arthur Conan-Doyle did to Sherlock Holmes. Conan-Doyle was getting so jealous, he felt Holmes was getting in the way of his serious works. Later, he had to revive him ....

"I find that Benny is not hard to live with, and I don't see myself taking more than a sabbatical away from him once in a while, as I did with Murder in Montparnasse."

That is certainly good news for his devoted public, who still can't get enough of Benny Cooperman, even after eight books, several radio treatments and two movies (starring Saul Rubinek).

"Howard Engel has a very loyal and solid readership in Canada," says his literary agent, Beverley Slopen, who also handles such authors as Diane Francis, Joey Slinger, Michael Marrus and Robert Fulford. "In Canada, he's probably the best-selling and best-loved mystery writer, and he has won international acclaim. He's considered among the top rank in the field by such people as Ruth Rendell, Tony Hillerman and Julian Symonds."

Other Benny Cooperman titles are The Ransom Game, Murder on Location, Murder Sees the Light, A City Called July, A Victim Must Be Found, Dead and Buried, and There Was An Old Woman. Many sell in other countries in translation.

Chick's trip from pen to plate

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — What makes a chicken kosher?

Many of us would probably echo the suggestions given in the opening sequence of Empire Kosher Poultry's new video From Our Table to Yours . . . The Journey of a Kosher Chicken. These comments range from "a rabbi blesses the chicken" to "the chicken only eats kosher food."

This recently released video is an effective description of the steps taken by one of the world's largest kosher poultry producers to bring kosher consumers their Shabbat roast chicken or stir-fry chicken and vegetables, from hatching the eggs to double sealing the packages of chicken for the supermarket.

It is fascinating to see the incubating system that rotates the eggs to simulate the action of a mother hen, the moving tanks which allow each chicken to be soaked for the required half an hour, and the assembly lines for everything from salting to cleaning to packaging.

The video explains that maintaining high standards of cleanliness and producing a healthy product are intrinsic in every step of the company's production process.

The growing chickens, we learn, for example, get a scientifically researched, all natural and highly nutritious diet in their temporary homes on Pennsylvania farms.

Video proves gory not always better

The actual schechitah is well explained with diagrams. The producers have thankfully resisted the temptation to be graphic in this part of the process.

(This is not a gratuitous comment. There are several widely used films on schechitah which are so bloody and detailed that viewers come away with nightmares.)

Journey of a Kosher Chicken emphasizes the fact that the company sees its role as reinforcing the holiness of the Jewish people. Scenes of Empire's own synagogue are interspersed with those of celebrations at the Kotel, weddings and a woman lighting the Shabbat candles.

Schochtim, besides being skilled in the halachic and technical aspects of their craft, must be pious, full of yirat shomayim (fear of heaven) and able to get along with others.

It is explained that kashruth standards are stricter than government standards. Certain defects which are acceptable to government officials render the chicken treif, including punctured organs, broken bones and certain abnormal growths.

This video is an excellent teaching tool on the subject of kosher poultry production, not just for schoolchildren but for the general public as well.

Copies of the video are available from Empire Kosher Poultry, P.O. Box 165, Mifflintown, PA. 17059.

Out Of The Garden: Women Writers on the Bible, edited by Christina Buchman & Celina Spiegel, Random House $31

Reading Ruth, edited by Judith Kates & Gail Reimer, Random House $32

What does it mean to read the Hebrew scriptures as a woman in our time? Do the familiar characters and narratives achieve new meaning? Are there nuances of interpretation and areas of sympathy and understanding denied to man? If more women had contributed to the writing of the original text, would the Bible be an even nobler and more inspiring work?

Out of the Garden is the first collection of literary essays on the Bible written exclusively by women. The editors have brought together 28 novelists, poets and essayists — Jewish and Christian — whose life or work has been influenced by the Bible. Their approaches to the material are rich and varied: literary, political, religious, autobiographical and scholarly.

Meditating on Eve, Barbara Harrison praises her despite her reputation as a temptress. After all, "without the genetically transmitted knowledge of good and evil that Eve's radical act of curiosity sowed in our marrow, we should not desire to know God and to love God, we should have no need of Him."

Cynthia Ozick regards Hannah as a religious rebel for daring to engage in silent and inward prayer at a time when liturgical speech was public.

For Marcia Falk, however, the recitation of Hannah's story on Rosh Hashanah, "with its triumphant ending, can turn the festival into an excruciating experience for Jews who — like Hannah — suffer the grief of infertility but whose prayers — unlike Hannah's — go unanswered."

The mysterious Queen of Sheba, confesses Marina Warner, "[is] the most exotic, luxurious, sensual, and exciting woman in the Bible; the name Sheba conveyed heat and perfume and riches . . . this configuration of qualities was essentialized as blackness as surely as myth oozed form the sap of faraway trees."

Vashti, who defied her husband, King Ahasuerus, and refused to dance before a party of drunken men, has become a feminist heroine, according to Out of the Garden. More than compliant Esther, she represents dignity and self-esteem.

In a remarkable essay, Lore Segal searches the Bible to fashion a profile of God. Her quest discovers a complex and contradictory deity. She brought her quarrel with God to the late Rabbi Wolf Kelman and pointed out how God, who commands sympathy, is often cruel. The rabbi "lifted both shoulders and turned out his hands in the gesture I remember my grandmother making when she meant 'True! So? What can you do?' which, in its refusal to deny, or harmonize, or finesse, or rationalize . . . acknowledges the difficulty and our human helplessness before it."

This anthology is a refreshing and impressive approach to scripture that breaks new ground and broadens horizons.

Reading Ruth is a compilation of 30 essays, poems, stories and dramatic narratives by contemporary female scholars, psychiatrists, rabbis and poets. It is a generally splendid collection of pieces that brings numerous original insights, as well as passion and humor to a familiar story.

Ruth, the young Moabite widow, follows her Israelite mother-in-law, Naomi, to the land of Israel, marries her husband's kinsman and becomes mother of the messianic line through her descendant, King David.

The engrossing narrative encompasses a wide spectrum of women's experience — marriage, childbirth, infertility and widowhood — as well as reconciliation and bonding. Who better than women can understand it fully or interpret it more successfully?

Museum Notes From All Over: Philadelphia's Rosenbach Museum & Library (215-732-1600) is displaying 50 rare manuscripts, drawings, portraits and books once belonging to Dr. A.S.W. Rosenbach, a prominent U.S. bibliophile who understood the importance of collecting items related to the American-Jewish experience. Items include manuscripts by Isaac Pinto, Aaron Levy, Gershom Mendes Seixas and other early Jewish settlers, and portraits of prominent Jews such as Benjamin and Rebecca Gratz (who was the model for the "Jewess" Rebecca in Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe.) Until April 2.

An exhibit entitled GIs Remember: Liberating the Concentration Camps opens at the Intrepid Sea Air Space Museum in New York City March 1. Produced by the National Museum of American Jewish Military History, the display pays tribute to the U.S. foot soldiers, tank crewmen, combat medics and others who freed the emaciated survivors of Hitler's death factories. Until Sept. 30.

What to do in Paris on a rainy afternoon? Try visiting the famous Louvre, home of Leonardo da Vinci's Mona Lisa, as well as (seemingly) millions of other works of fine art. Somewhat controversial when it first appeared in the '80s, I.M. Pei's grand pyramid acts as a wonderful vestibule to this extraordinary museum, and most Parisians have taken it into their hearts. The adult admission of 40 francs ($11.20) is reduced by half after 3 p.m.

The Andy Warhol Museum in Pittsburgh houses more than 3,000 pieces of Warholian pop art, including the famous Campbell's Soup cans and celebrity portraits of Marilyn Monroe, Jackie Onassis, Elvis Presley and Canada's Karen Kain. It's worth more than a 15-minute visit.

The New Orleans Historic Voodoo Museum presents voodoo dolls, secret potions, books and other paraphernalia of black magic. Centrally located in the historic French Quarter of New Orleans, the museum also offers psychic readings and tours of a nearby cemetery and swamp.

I.M. Pei's controversial entrance to the Louvre.

The Boston Children's Museum invites youngsters to touch and interact with educational exhibits — raceways, dancing skeletons, a climbing apparatus, even an authentic Japanese subway car.

Nashville's Museum of Tobacco Art and History explores the politically incorrect but fascinating universe of smoking. Displayed are such unique artifacts as a pipe commemorating Napoleon's retreat from Moscow and a six-foot wooden cigar store Indian.

Situated in the Chicago Cultural Center, the American Museum of Broadcast Communications features a working television studio where visitors can read the news from a teleprompter and take home a souvenir tape. The museum's archives houses a collection of more than 6,000 television shows, 49,000 hours of radio broadcasts and more than 8,000 television commercials. The Radio Hall of Fame features exhibits on Jack Benny, Edgar Bergen and others.

Visitors are encouraged to "think small" at the Petite Elite Miniature Museum & Gallery in Los Angeles, which displays unique hand-crafted contemporary miniatures. Movie stars, politicians, athletes and others are reproduced in miniature, along with clothing, furnishings, houses and examples of fine art.

The Heard Museum in Phoenix, Ariz., features a display of contemporary native American art that includes a bizarre 8-ft. tall cactus constructed of Rice Krispie treats by Rebecca Gloria-Jean Baird, an artist from Toronto. The museum also shows Navajo, Hopi and Zuni jewelry and a large Kachina doll collection.

While we're on the subject of museums ... the Holocaust Education Centre of Toronto is planning an exhibition commemorating the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Europe by Allied forces. It is currently seeking objects, photographs and correspondence relating to experiences in displaced persons camps, evacuation marches and liberated concentration camps. Call Pnina Zilberman, director, at (416) 635-2883, ext. 144.

Liberation of Denmark: Numerous activities are planned to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Denmark. On the evening of May 4, candles will glow in windows throughout the country, and an unbroken line of laser lights will trace part of the Jutland coast from 10 p.m. to midnight. Simultaneous concerts from eight locations will be televised. On May 5, Queen Margrethe II is set to visit Ryvangen Memorial Park, dedicated to Danish civilians who lost their lives during the April 9, 1940 to May 5, 1945 Nazi occupation. Student tours to Israel

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Hoping to encourage as many young Jewish people as possible to visit Israel, the CRB Foundation has established a toll-free phone line with comprehensive information on student tours to Israel.

The Israel Experience hotline (1-800-567-ISRA(EL)) offers information on more than 40 upcoming trips for students between 15 and 24, spokesperson Roberta Malam told The CJN from Winnipeg.

"There are a wide variety of programs. You can do straight touring or you can spend time on a kibbutz and then do touring," she said. "There's a program in which students go to Metulla to teach kids ice skating before touring."

Some tours include Gadna, for a taste of Israeli army life, while others include visits to Eastern European concentration camps sites. "There's a trip called Exodus '95 that starts in Rome and gives the participants an idea of what it felt like coming to Israel on the Exodus. They play a simulation game in which they're war refugees and the British won't let them in," Malam said.

Only by calling 1-800-567-ISRA(EL) does one get a sense of the many possibilities available to Canadian students interested in visiting Israel. Funded as a pilot project by the CRB Foundation, a charitable organization established by Montreal magnate Charles Bronfman, the Israel Hotline is co-sponsored by the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Zionist Federation, the United Jewish Appeal, the Council of Jewish Federations and other major community organizations.

"We're trying to get as many young Jews to Israel as possible, because this is one of the best ways to insure these young people remain committed and dedicated Jews during their adult years," explained Eli Rubenstein, director of the Young Leadership Division for the United Israel Appeal (UIA) Canada.

1-800-567-ISRA(EL) is "the one number to call to learn about all the student programs to Israel," he said. "This is the only place you can call to get answers to your questions or get directed to the right place to get your questions answered."

According to Rubenstein, organizers hope to send 50,000 Jewish students from Canada to Israel by the end of the century.

"Our relationship to Israel is a two-way street. As much as we can do for Israel, Israel can do at least as much for us," he said.

"Israel can help give our young people a positive experience, and make them understand that there's a 2,000-year-old dream being fulfilled. Now our young people can go to Israel, share in the dream, help build the dream, then return to our communities and enrich our communities because of their experiences in Israel."

Newspaper advertisements, billboards and radio commercials are being used to publicize the hotline, which is also being funded by the UIA and the Joint Authority for Jewish Zionist Education in Israel. The hotline also operates in the United States using a different toll-free number.

Whistler's still the tops

BRITISH COLUMBIA — Nestled in the mountains of British Columbia 75 miles north of Vancouver lies Whistler Resort — an alpine village unique for its European charm, breathtaking scenery and unparalleled skiing.

The Whistler Resort Association (WRA) recently announced that once again the Whistler Resort — home of Whistler and Blackcomb Mountains — has been rated the No. 1 ski resort in North America for the third year in a row by Snow Country Magazine.

Whistler Resort achieved this rating for its vertical rise (5,280 feet); variety and expanse of terrain (6,998 skiable acres); lift system (26 in total with 12 high-speed lifts); friendly service; and pure skiing fun.

Twelve bowls including three glaciers and more than 200 marked trails — steep powder chutes, challenging mogul fields, scheduled tree skiing, and groomed cruising runs — offer skiers hours of enjoyment.

In February 1966, when the Garibaldi Lift Company opened its ski area on the west side of Whistler Mountain, Whistler resort was only the vision of a dedicated few.

The development of the resort 14 years later and its successful growth into an award-winning establishment is unparalleled in ski history.

To complement Whistler Mountain, Blackcomb Mountain opened in December 1980 and Whistler Village was built at the base of the mountains.

The village itself was carefully designed to reap the benefits of the Coast Mountain's excellent geographical location. Innovative design principles emphasize sun exposure and breathtaking vistas.

When finished with the adventures the slopes have to offer, visitors can explore distinctive shops that feature the latest in fashions and sportswear, art galleries that exhibit local creations, and gift boutiques filled with an assortment of treasures.

As a family holiday, the resort area offers activities such as alpine sightseeing, fishing, heli-skiing, ice-skating, paragliding, sleigh rides and indoor swimming. A children's program is also available.

For more information about packages and reservations, call 1-800-WHISTLER.

Correction

An article entitled, "Kosher Jewish delicacies in gay Paree" (CJN Dec. 15) indicated that Goldenberg's restaurant, 69, avenue de Wagram, Paris, is under rabbinic supervision.

Responding to a reader who questioned this information, CJN contacted the restaurant in Paris and learned that, while Goldenberg's does have a take-out deli section that sells meat which is under rabbinic supervision, the restaurant itself is open on Shabbat and is not kosher.

The CJN regrets the error.

U.S. recommits to Israel's military advantage

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service and Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — U.S. Secretary of Defence William Perry on Sunday reaffirmed Washington's commitment to the Israeli-Syrian peace process, saying that was one reason for his Mideast visit.

"Our commitment to the peace process is one of the reasons I have come here, together with reaffirming our unshakeable commitment to Israel's security and maintaining Israel's qualitative advantage," Perry said at a state dinner in Jerusalem hosted by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Perry, who was here for two days, discussed with Rabin the possibility of deploying U.S. troops as observers on the Golan Heights, if and when a Syrian-Israeli accord is reached.

"We have willingness to discuss that, but it is premature at this time," he said. "We do not yet have a peace plan, and in particular we don't have a plan for how peace keeping forces might be deployed there."

Secretary of Defence visits Golan Heights

But Foreign Minister Shimon Peres hinted that the issue was on the table, saying: "We don't want to worry American mothers and, at most, what we are talking about is really a participation of a rather symbolic nature which doesn't carry risks and dangers."

Israeli opposition leaders visited the Golan Heights on Sunday on the eve of Perry's visit.

"It's important that Perry should know that when he's talking to the present government, which wants to give the Golan Heights to the Syrians, he's talking to a minority government," said Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu.

He said it was equally important that Perry be aware that the vast majority of the public is opposed to a withdrawal from the Golan.

Netanyahu, as well as leaders of Tsomet and the National Religious Party (NRP), met with representatives of Katzrin, a community in the Golan Heights, before holding a press conference.

Referring to Perry's visit, Netanyahu said he "strongly recommends" the U.S. defence secretary come to the region to see the situation for himself.

Tsomet leader Rafael Eitan underlined the strategic importance of the Golan, maintaining that the Arab world had not changed its attitude toward Israel.

MK Yigal Bibi of the NRP stressed there is a national consensus against any pullout from the Golan. He called on all the parties and pro-Golan lobbyists to ensure the matter stays in the public eye, especially in the coming months, which he said would be a crucial period.

B.C. launches police unit

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — British Columbia Attorney General Colin Gabelmann has formed a law enforcement unit with a potentially explosive mandate: to explore possible links between far-right racist organizations and the anti-abortion movement.

The Coordinated Law Enforcement Unit will research the activities of anti-abortion groups operating in Vancouver.

The unit was set up following the near-fatal Nov. 8 shooting of Jewish doctor Gary Romalis, a gynecologist who works at a Vancouver abortion clinic.

Romalis was shot in his home by an unknown assailant. He is still recovering.

Gabelmann said the unit will not examine individual complaints, but possible connections between anti-abortionists and far-right racist groups.

Composed of representatives of the Vancouver Police Department and the RCMP, the unit is due to report to Gabelmann next month.

The attorney general's announcement came on the heels of several local media reports linking the anti-abortion movement with the racist right.

CANADA

Ouellet to Mideast

OTTAWA — Foreign Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet will visit five Mideast countries later this month, including Israel.

Ouellet will visit Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Israel, and will preside over the re-opening of Canada's embassy in Beirut, ministry spokesman Rodney Moore told The CJN last week.

Ouellet's trip will take place from Jan. 17-31. Other details were not available last week.

Order of Canada

OTTAWA — Several prominent Jewish Canadians were named to the Order of Canada last week.

Named a Companion, the order's highest rank, was Toronto arts patron Arthur Gelber.

Among those named Officers of the order are Toronto philanthropist Joseph Rotman; Montreal judge Alan Gold; media mogul Harold Greenberg, also of Montreal; and Winnipeg businessman Albert Cohen.

Among the 52 new Members are Toronto artist Sorel Etrog; David Lepofsky, a Toronto lawyer; CBC-TV reporter Joe Schlesinger; Montreal philanthropist Edith Strauss; Winnipeg's Dr. Lyonel Israels for his work in health care; Vancouver musician and artistic director Leila Getz, and her husband, urban planner Peter Oberlander.

Calling Science Students

TORONTO — Six outstanding science students will be chosen to represent Canada this summer at The Bessie F. Lawrence 27th International Summer Science Institute at the Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovot from July 12 to Aug. 11.

The program, conducted in English, is open to students entering university in September 1995 to pursue studies in science. Participants will work in small research groups in such areas as medicine, environmental problems or alternative energy sources. Three weeks on campus will be followed by a stint at a field school in the Negev.

For information and application forms, contact Edie Bayer at (416) 733-9220. Application deadline is March 1, 1995.

ISRAEL

Chechen Jews Flee

JERUSALEM — The Jewish quarter of Grozny is in ruins and there is hardly a building left undamaged in the Chechen capital, Jewish refugees reaching the southern Russian town of Nalchik have reported.

Twenty Jews have arrived in Nalchik over the last few weeks, bringing to 140 the number who have fled since heavy fighting broke out between Chechen nationalists and Russian troops. The Jewish refugees are housed, clothed, and fed by Jewish Agency emissaries, Nalchik emissary Shimon Drogan reported.

"The Jewish community, to all intents and purposes, is now extinct. The houses of the Jewish quarter have been destroyed, and only a handful of elderly people, too ill and weak to flee, are believed to be hiding in shelters," he said.

Meanwhile, the agency last week was organizing a second group of Jewish refugees to be brought to Israel soon. Last week, more than 30 Chechen Jews arrived here on a special flight.

A Real Take-out Order

JERUSALEM — Late night hankerings for pizza have gotten a number of Israeli soldiers into hot water.

The army is reportedly investigating soldiers operating in the security zone in southern Lebanon for allegedly using cellular telephones to order pizzas.

A waitress in northern Israel told Israel Radio how she would meet the soldiers, who drove to the border in a command car around midnight to pick up the pies.

Last week, the army imposed a ban on the soldiers' use of cellular telephones, which have become something of a craze in Israel.

Along with ordering pizzas, some soldiers on duty in Lebanon have apparently been using the telephones to contact their brokers for the latest stock quotes.

Yom Kippur War Report

JERUSALEM — Nearly 20 years after its completion, a report by a commission investigating the 1973 Yom Kippur War was made public last week.

The commission, established to study the blunders that allowed Israel to be caught off guard, found that then-Defence Minister Moshe Dayan had rejected the option of a pre-emptive strike against Egypt and Syria.

The report also found that Israeli intelligence reports at the time were seriously flawed.

Woman Attacked Again

ROME — A Norwegian Jewish woman who last summer was the victim of an apparent anti-Semitic attack has been assaulted again.

Myriam Geelmuyden was found unconscious and with her face cut last week near the doorway of her home in the central Italian town of Assisi.

Geelmuyden told police she had opened the door to a young man claiming to be delivering a telegram, but who instead attacked her.

Geelmuyden, a writer, said she believed her attacker may have been one of three youths who assaulted her in the street last August, slashing her face and yelling anti-Semitic slogans.

Schindler's Letter

WASHINGTON — The widow of World War II hero Oskar Schindler has written to U.S. President Bill Clinton, urging clemency for convicted spy for Israel Jonathan Pollard.

"I know from personal experience that often, good decisions are the most difficult to make," Emilie Schindler wrote in a Dec. 20 letter to Clinton, a copy of which was sent to The CJN by Citizens for Justice for Jonathan Pollard, Canada.

"Mr. Pollard's misguided deeds were motivated by a fear for the safety of the Jewish people in Israel. He has paid a very heavy price for that mistake and I hope that you will take the steps that will enable him to lead the rest of his life as a productive member of society," Mrs. Schindler said."

Clinton last year denied a commutation of Pollard's life sentence, which began 10 years ago.

New Museum Director

NEW YORK — The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council named a new director for the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum last week.

Steven Katz, a 50-year-old professor of history and religion at Cornell University, will succeed founding director Jeshajahu Weinberg, 76, who is retiring.

Katz's appointment takes effect in March.

Weizman to England

LONDON — President Ezer Weizman is expected to visit England at the invitation of Queen Elizabeth to attend a ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of the victory over Nazi Germany.

Weizman was invited to London following the visit to Israel two months ago of Prince Philip. No date was set for Weizman's visit.

Continuity tops Network's agenda

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — About 140 Jewish students returned to their communities across Canada determined to complete two main tasks this year.

The first is to use the Jewish continuity issue to reach out to the student grassroots and to revitalize the Jewish Students' Network in an era where many of the issues that once shaped its agenda — such as the plight of Soviet Jewry — are now resolved.

The second is to keep Network itself alive. Members feel the 27-year-old organization has been under constant threat of being "restructured" out of existence and/or of losing its $100,000 in annual funding from the Council of Jewish Federations (CJF) Canada.

The five-day annual convention was held at the Bonaventure Hilton Hotel.

"One of Network's problems [is that] there has never been a clear commitment money-wise," said Joel Etienne, a 21-year-old University of Montreal law student originally from Moncton, N.B.

About a quarter of the delegates came from small western communities. Lori Binder, 21, a University of Winnipeg student, said they are determined to fight assimilation, and they need to be given the tools to protect the future "of our children and grandchildren."

Ali Powell

In a move that upset some delegates, Etienne initially accepted the elected chairmanship of Network, succeeding Andrea Silverstone of Calgary — only to change his mind the next day.

Etienne explained he did this to devote all his energies to Network's programming.

The chair then went to Ali Powell, also of Calgary.

Powell, who was in the Bahamas, could not attend the convention due to an inner ear infection, but she took part in an all-candidates debate on election night via telephone.

The need for Jewish students to reach out more to each other was the theme that emerged during the convention. As it opened, Silverstone even spoke of the Jewish community facing a "massive spiritual holocaust" due to lack of Jewish affiliation.

Resolutions and suggested programs seemed to reflect more concrete ideas on how to handle that issue.

Etienne said his main priority will be to "build consensus" and strive for a new "inward activism" in Network.

Some of the programs he said he will seek to put into place relate to the environment, multiculturalism, "Jewish pride," small communities, and reaching out to "interdating" and unaffiliated Jews, as well as to the black community (Etienne's father, who converted to Judaism, is black).

Network voiced its intent to stage a one-day conference across Canada on women's issues, to hold a summer leadership seminar in Israel within the next two years, and to take advantage of the information superhighway.

One resolution was to send a petition to CJF Canada's Sheldon Maerov expressing concern over Network's future and the crisis of "spiritual atrophy" facing the Canadian Jewish community.

One postive sign for Network was the participation of delegates from the regions outside the Montreal/Toronto corridor.

In Montreal, where Network had been inactive for six years, there has also been a revival of activities, Montreal coordinator Bena Medjuck, 21, said.

Medjuck, a McGill University Jewish Studies student orginally from Halifax, said Network is planning a local Tu b'Shevat project with the Jewish National Fund and will cooperate with the Hillel Jewish Student Centre in staging other activities.

Sunquest gets OK to fly to Israel

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Despite objections from El Al Airlines, Israel's Civil Aviation Authority has given permission to the Canadian travel wholesaler Sunquest Vacations Ltd. to operate a series of weekly charter flights between Toronto and Tel Aviv from May to October 1995.

Although the development is public knowledge in Israel, officials at Sunquest headquarters in Toronto are withholding all details from the Canadian media until a press conference scheduled for Jan. 16.

Currently TWA, Delta and Tower Air all compete with El Al in offering direct flights to Israel from the United States, but until the Sunquest breakthrough, El Al has had exclusive rights on direct flights to Israel from Canada.

In recent weeks, officials of Israel's national airline have threatened to stop its twice-weekly service from Toronto and Montreal if Sunquest's request was approved. El Al officials have so far declined to comment about the future of its service in Canada.

According to Yona Nechushtan, the Montreal-based vice-president and general manager for El Al Canada, company officials were still waiting last week to learn the details of Sunquest's proposed charters.

Education key priority for Agency candidate Burg

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — So why would one of Israel's most popular young MKs, whose political star is on the rise, want a job that has been described as a Miami Beach for public figures in the sunset of their careers?

Avraham Burg adjusts his knitted kippah and chuckles. "It's also called a Jewish Bermuda Triangle," he says, referring to the position for which he's running hard: the chair of the often beleaguered and much misunderstood Jewish Agency for Israel.

The agency is the central distributor in Israel of funds raised by the United Jewish Appeal (UJA) in the Diaspora.

In 1994, the agency's budget topped $450 million (US), with 60 per cent spent on aliyah and initial absorption of immigrants.

Burg, a Labor member of the Knesset who placed third in the 1992 party leadership race, is locked in a battle for the agency's top job with acting chair Yehiel Leket.

Actually, Burg is running to become chair of the World Zionist Organization. That person automatically assumes the chair of the more powerful Jewish Agency, subject to approval from Diaspora fundraising groups, who comprise half the agency's board of governors.

Burg and Leket are competing for their Labor Party's endorsement, scheduled for a vote next month.

Burg, 39, combines many divergent and seemingly paradoxical strands of modern Israeli life. He's a religious peacenik totally committed to Yiddishkeit and to peaceful coexistence with Arabs. His father, Josef, served in Likud cabinets for some 40 years.

Burg dismisses the long-held view that heading the Jewish Agency is not exactly a stepping-stone to political glory. Anyone who knows him, he says, shouldn't be surprised at his desire for the post.

"For the first time in history, both Israeli Jewry and Diaspora Jewry are about to have the same agenda: survival. That's why I want the job," he told The CJN during a recent one-day visit to Toronto to confer with UJA and United Israel Appeal leaders.

"I was an active peacenik for many years but I never believed that one day we would make peace with our enemies. One day, I looked up and [Prime Minister] Yitzhak Rabin was to my left. I was amazed.

"But now, we are past the point of no return. There will be suffering and agony and horror but one day, there will be peace in the Middle East. And that will leave us with many ticking social time bombs — social tensions, ethnic tensions, state versus church...

"But the single most important one is, can we survive as Jews without an external enemy? We in Israel are not immune to cultural assimilation."

Avraham Burg

Of course, neither are Jews in the Diaspora, who, for the most part, live in democracies relatively free of anti-Semitism, where the pull of secularism is ever stronger. Assimilation, not oppression, is now our greatest enemy, Burg feels.

With Jews worldwide at a crossroads, which way should the agency turn to meet the challenges?

"In the long term, the rescue of distressed Jewry, including from the former Soviet Union, is still the priority," Burg says. "After that, I would have three goals: Jewish education, Jewish education and Jewish education, in both Israel and the Diaspora. At the end of the day, the only thing that will ensure Jewish continuity is Jewish education, and I mean that in the broadest sense."

Burg envisions a revamping of the Jewish learning experience to return to age-old notions of visiting the sick and old, caring for the terminally ill and giving tzedakah, which in Israel, he says, is just not part of the national psyche.

"There's a feeling of entitlement among many Israelis. They say, 'Well, I'm religious, or secular, or a minority or an immigrant, so I'm entitled, and Jews abroad are all rich.' In Britain, 300,000 Jews raise more money than 5 million Israelis. I want to change that. I want to challenge Israelis to create our own local magbiot [fundraising organizations]"

Asked about Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin's remarks last year, in which he called for the dismantling of the agency and an end to Israel's being perceived as a charity, Burg raises his hand and says: "Yossi Beilin is my good friend, but I think it would be stupid to shut down the Jewish Agency. As long as both sides want it, there will be a need for it.

"We have to reintroduce the Jewish Agency as the single most important Jewish body in North America. The philosophy over the past few decades [in Israel] has been 'Give us the money and shut up.' There must be a new era of dialogue between Israel and the Diaspora. We have to learn how to listen to each other."

WHAT IS THE JEWISH AGENCY?

The Jewish Agency is a non-governmental body, centered in Jerusalem, whose aims are to assist in the development and settlement of Israel.

The agency was founded in 1929 as part of the World Zionist Organization. From that date until the establishment of the State of Israel, the body played the principal role in the relations between the National Home and world Jewry on the one hand, and the Mandatory and other powers on the other.

In May 1948 the Jewish Agency relinquished many of its functions to the newly-created government of Israel but continued to be responsible for immigration, land settlement, youth work, and other activities financed by voluntary contributions from abroad. The name of the Jewish Agency in Hebrew is Hasochnut Hayehudit.

North York man dies in apartment fire

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A 35-year-old Jewish man was one of six victims of a fatal apartment fire in North York that has focused attention on safety standards in the province's highrises.

Close to 400 mourners turned out Sunday to pay tribute to Stewart Scheinert, an uncomplicated man who loved porcelain figurines.

Scheinert was a top-floor tenant in the 30-storey building at 2 Forest Laneway that was engulfed in smoke and flames early last Friday morning. His body was found near the locked roof door, where he was escaping when overcome by smoke.

"He was such a wonderful boy," said his grief-stricken father, Murray Scheinert. "Everybody liked him and he didn't have an enemy in the world."

Murray Scheinert told The CJN he hopes similar tragedies will be averted following a planned coroner's inquest.

Scheinert also leaves his mother Nettie, brother Stephen and sister-in-law Barbara.

Social worker sheds light on child abuse in Israel

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Hanita Zimrin

TORONTO — One might expect Hanita Zimrin, founder and chair of ELI, a Tel Aviv-based organization for abused children, to have no tolerance for child abusers.

But though she doesn't condone their crimes, the Jerusalem-born professor and mother of three grown children sees abusers, particularly parents, as "people in distress.

"Our message is, 'We don't like what you do, but we do like you'," said Zimrin, 49, during a recent interview in Toronto.

She believes that while it's easy to empathize with victims of abuse, "you need to go through a painful process to find compassion for someone who behaves against everything you were raised on. It's difficult, but if you want to help, you need to find those things within yourself."

That attitude has paved the way for abusers and potential abusers to call ELI's Israel-wide hotline and ask for help. In fact, 18 per cent of their calls are from perpetrators, Zimrin said.

Recently, an ELI volunteer received a call from a father who was having sexual fantasies about his 7-year-old daughter. The opportunity to prevent this form of child abuse was very gratifying for Zimrin. "It's worth it to get this single call."

Zimrin's involvement in the field began when she was a PhD student at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem looking for an "interesting and easy" subject for her thesis. The first person in Israel to receive a PhD in Social Work in 1978, Zimrin chose the topic "maltreatment of children" at the suggestion of a pediatrician friend. The term child abuse had yet to enter common usage.

Following her thesis research, Zimrin wanted to help abused children. But she encountered denial and even hostility when she broached the subject with the Israeli ministries of health and education, she said.

"What is your hidden agenda? Do you have a dirty mind?" she remembers being asked.

To channel her anger, she founded ELI in 1979. The acronym, standing for the Hebrew words Agudah L'Haganat Hayeled (Association for Child Protection), also means My God, "a cry for help," said executive director Ronit Rabinowitz, with Zimrin during a North American tour.

Fifteen years ago, despite advanced child protection laws, there was a dearth of services for children in Israel, said Zimrin. It was generally believed that such services weren't necessary.

The first seven or eight years of Zimrin's work involved public education to challenge the notion that abuse didn't occur in Jewish families.

Eventually, the organization started to get calls for help. ELI now has three facilities, including an office and training unit with a library and clearing house for information on child abuse. The organization has a staff of 42 paid employees (Zimrin herself didn't draw a salary for the first 10 years). They also have about two dozen professional volunteers.

ELI has successfully worked to have child protection laws in Israel further refined. Zimrin is hopeful that legislation will be enacted soon to exempt agencies such as ELI from requiring a parent's consent to treat a child.

ELI's $1-million (US) annual budget comes from a number of individuals and organizations. It began active fundraising three years ago, and last year, for the first time, received government money for a new shelter for children at high risk.

A typical ELI case, Zimrin and Rabinowitz say, can take a year of intensive therapy involving five sessions a week. "This is an investment," said Zimrin. "We need to break the cycle of psychological damage."

In the past year, ELI made educational presentations to 70,000 Israeli schoolchildren, most of whom are Jewish.

The organization receives almost 3,000 reports of abuse annually, said Zimrin, and the numbers are increasing with increasing public awareness. "The more [education] we do, the more [treatment] there is to be done."

Na'amat helps build women's shelter

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Na'amat Canada is helping the city of Tel Aviv build its first shelter and counselling centre for battered women.

The $1-million project, to be completed in late spring, will house 18 women and their children in the Moaz Aviv district of Tel Aviv.

Israeli architect Ornit Lapin designed the 1,385-sq.ft. building to include consultation and treatment rooms, a library and lecture halls.

Na'amat Canada will underwrite 50 per cent of the building costs with the Tel Aviv Foundation, said president Etty Danzig. Na'amat in Israel will run the centre under director Ronit Lev-Avi.

"There will be a waiting list a mile long" for shelter beds, Danzig said, quoting statistics compiled by Na'amat's family violence department in Israel. Staffers there have reported receiving 20 calls a day from battered women, of whom 20 per cent are calling from the Tel Aviv region. The Tel Aviv counselling centre will staff a 24-hour hot line.

Na'amat has estimated there are up to 300,000 battered women in Israel.

Na'amat Canada is planning a fundraising drive for the shelter and counselling centre.

Lublin linked to Droege

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A security report on the Heritage Front has alleged a former Jewish member of the Reform Party maintained a secret association with neo-Nazi Wolfgang Droege and both plotted to raise each other's public profiles.

In a series of dramatic revelations, the recently-released report of the Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) indicates that Kitchener-Waterloo native Michael Lublin forged a "clandestine alliance" with Droege to discredit the Reform Party.

The Machiavellian scheming outlined in the SIRC report also has Lublin coordinating transmission of funds from a "Bay Street type" to Droege as a pay off for him to embarrass Reform.

Citing a number of sources, the report suggests Lublin wanted to be seen as the Heritage Front's number one enemy while also making a name for himself as a peacemaker between neo-Nazis and Jews.

The report states that members of the Heritage Front believed Lublin coveted Bernie Farber's job as director of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress.

And in a twist to an already bizarre series of revelations, the report says Lublin suggested the Heritage Front blow up his car to show he was the racist group's primary opponent.

When contacted by The CJN, Lublin postponed the interview to another day and then did not return calls.

The SIRC investigation was prompted by media reports that Grant Bristow, a Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) informant in the Heritage Front, conducted a harassment campaign against anti-racists and tried to embarass the Reform Party by linking it to racist groups.

SIRC report

In a section titled "The Enigma," the SIRC report traces Lublin's involvement with Reform. He is quoted as leaving the party over allegations it was anti-Semitic. Reform officials suggest he turned on the party after he was rejected for a party position.

Citing Bristow as a source, the SIRC report suggests that "Lublin was an anti-racist who wanted to be a spokesperson for the Jewish community ... As a negotiator, he could make a name for himself." Bristow took a photograph of Lublin and Droege arm-in-arm.

The report also states that in April 1993, "Droege told Bristow the Heritage Front might wish to engage Lublin for publicity purposes and also the two groups could work together to discredit Preston Manning and the Reform Party."

It was further learned that Lublin wanted to be called the Heritage Front's primary opponent because "the notoriety [would] establish him as the guardian of the Jewish community ... Lublin even suggested that the Heritage Front should blow up his personal vehicle so that he could show the public that he was an important neo-Nazi enemy."

Lublin told SIRC that Farber and university student John Toogood worked together to discredit Reform. He later withdrew that allegation.

"It's clear that Lublin's credibility on this issue is non-existent," Farber said. "It's vicious nonsense."

With regard to suggestions that Lublin coveted his job and had a secret association with Droege, Farber said "if the allegations are true, I have no idea why any Jew would at any time try to make common cause with a Nazi. A Jew who makes common cause with a Nazi should be ashamed of himself."

CELEBRATE
TU B'SHVAT 1995/5755 • THE NEW YEAR OF TREES
Send a message of love and hope to Israel
"Say it With Trees" . . . . . Planting for Peace

TU B'SHVAT, the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Shvat has been celebrated as The New Year of Trees for many centuries by Jews around the world. The way in which to celebrate this holiday has been traditionally the planting of trees in Israel.

So, in recent times, TU B'SHVAT has become known all over Israel as THE JNF HOLIDAY, since the Jewish National Fund organizes thousands of tree-plantings over the length and breadth of Israel on that day.

YOU CAN PLANT TREES IN ISRAEL with the help of JNF. Clip and mail the attached form to us and JNF will plant your trees for you.

You can celebrate TU B'SHVAT by planting trees for yourself, your family and your friends. You thereby establish a link with the land and the people of Israel which continues to grow, which makes Israel green and beautiful, which protects the soil and which preserves the environment.

Trees are symbols - of hope, of beauty, of strength, of strong roots, of the future, of love and of a bond with the soil and the sky of Israel.

CELEBRATE TU B'SHVAT BY THE PLANTING OF TREES. SEND YOUR MESSAGE OF LOVE TO THE PEOPLE OF ISRAEL! SAY IT WITH TREES!

Political mischief, not legal reasoning

The decision last month by the Federal Court of Canada rejecting the claim to "refugee status" made by a family which had moved to Canada from Israel was a refreshing breeze dissipating a fetid odor which had clung shamefully to Canadian immigration law.

In recent times we have witnessed the sad, sorry spectacle of hundreds of Israeli citizens, most of them new immigrants to Israel from the former Soviet Union, landing on Canadian shores and promptly appealing to officials for admission to Canada as refugees and for the automatic welfare cheques which accompany such status.

We have also witnessed the sadder and sorrier spectacle of the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB) accepting many of these spurious claims as factually and legally valid.

Under the terms of the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, and its 1967 Protocol, Canada is obliged to determine the status of persons who claim refuge in this country. The Convention defines a refugee as "a person unable to return to his or her home country because of a well-founded fear of persecution based on race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular social group."

No other country in the world has ever accepted Israeli citizens as refugees. And for good reason.

Israel is a democracy. Its Knesset is freely elected. Its judiciary is respected throughout the world as independent, scholarly and bold. Its press is free, aggressive and constantly inquiring into the decisions of the government. But most important, each and every individual is free to the leave the country.

That there may be discrimination, resentment and even ridicule directed against some of its citizens is a painful flaw of Israeli life from which no society is free. But, as Federal Court Justice Marshall Rothstein stated in his ruling, discrimination — if there is any — does not amount to persecution

That there are "entrepreneurial" individuals looking for ways to exploit the generosity of both the Israeli and the Canadian systems is unfortunate but not surprising. But that a Canadian tribunal is willing to submit to such venal exploitation is a mockery to the brotherhood of democratic nations and a shameful stain upon the integrity of the adjudicating body.

In our view, the IRB decisions accepting the refugee claims attest more to an agenda of political mischief rather than to a dedication to legal reasoning.

Tu b'Shevat

The origin of Tu b'Shevat is found in the Talmud. It is one of four dates in the annual calendar specially appointed by the rabbis as a "new year" for certain purposes: in this case as a dividing line for determining the tithes of fruits incumbent upon farmers during the days of the Temple.

After the destruction of the temple, the 15th (T'U) of Shevat evolved into a commemorative day marked by festivities and localized customs involving the eating of various fruits.

Of course, in modern times the holiday has acquired new significance symbolizing the reclamation and the redemption of the Land of Israel. It is a day of tree planting, celebrated primarily for and by the children.

However the attachment of the Jewish people to trees predates Talmudic times by thousands of years. It is an atavistic tie, nestled deep within the consciousness of the people, as evidenced by the very first narrative in the Bible which depicts mankind's inner moral struggle as a choice between the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge.

The attachment is also one of respect. Even in times of war, during a long siege of the enemy's city, biblical law expressly prohibited armies from cutting down the trees outside the city walls.

Mankind and nature are linked in a divinely created symbiosis which replenishes both human generations and the earth.

It is no coincidence that, like the mountains, trees aspire towards heaven. They are, thus, a worthy example for mankind.

As was once pointed out by a modern rabbi: "Trees grow upward: so should human beings. Trees, with their green leaves and tenderly tinted blossoms, seek the light: so should human beings."

STUDENT'S JEWISH PRIDE

Re: "Jewish Identity," (CJN, Dec. 15).

I agree 100 per cent with this student's feelings. We do not promote pride in being Jewish. We Jews have a lot to be proud of. We have contributed to mankind in science, medicine, literature, art and business.

Let the teachers and community leaders teach our people to be proud of our Jewishness - not to hide the fact. And we should not pride ourselves that we don't look or act Jewish. It will be more beneficial than to dwell on past suffering.

REUNION OF BERGEN-BELSEN SURVIVORS

A memorial ceremony will be held at the site of concentration camp Bergen-Belsen, funded by the German state, commemorating the 50th anniversary of its liberation by the British army, April 27, 1995 (four days after the liberation ceremonies at the site of concentration camps Sachsenhausen and Ravensbruck, located in and funded by another German state). Surviving former inmates are invited to attend.

The state has sent funds to Bergen-Belsen survivors organizations worldwide, to assist surving members who wish to attend. Those survivors who are interested should contact, as early as possible: World Federation of Bergen-Belsen Associations, Norbert Wollheim, Box 232, Lennox Hill Station, New York N.Y. 10021 for further details.

DECRIES VIOLENCE AT EFRAT

I am appalled at the violence perpetrated against Israeli soldiers by the extreme Israeli left who are supporting the Arabs against the expansion of the town of Efrat

How sad it is to witness our brothers siding with the enemy. How ironic it is that the secularists salute as the Arab hordes scream Allah akbar (G-d is great) as the soldiers are attacked and injured by rocks and bottles (Yediot Acharonot Jan. 1). If Jews are unable to build houses on legally owned Jewish soil, the day cannot be too far off when Jewish building in Ramle and Haifa will also be stopped "for the sake of peace."

PLO PLAN FOR ISRAEL IS CLEAR

The events taking place in the Arab-Israeli conflict since Labor's victory in Israel in 1992 bring to mind those in Europe after the publication of Hitler's Mein Kampf, in which he clearly laid out his plan for Germany's hegemony and for his pet project of the "Final Solution."

Regrettably, the international community was oblivious to his utterances and his deeds, but he kept his word and, after he was given the power, proceeded religiously according to his plan.

Similarly, the PLO was very clear on its ultimate plan for the destruction of Israel and for the last 30 years it has been striving persistently and diligently to achieve it.

In spite of the limping, by some considered moribund, peace process, PLO leaders have not been shy about their goal, and on different occasions have proclaimed it publicly. And regrettably, the present Israeli government appears to have blinkers on their eyes and ear plugs in their ears. In my view, it is time to remove them.

SPEAK OUT FOR JUDAISM

I want to express my appreciation for the article, "The Case for Jewish Proselytism" by Dr. Nelson Daniels in Viewpoints (CJN, Nov. 24).

It is no exageration to say that in the name of the blood spilled since time immemorial, it is not only right to prevent individuals like Ernst Zundel and his kind from spreading hate messages, but that it is much better to let the world know what Judaism is

Israel in particular and the world in general needs to be protected from nuclear devastation.

Any gloom regarding the end of this century and the beginning of the next fascinates astrologists. But do these people believe in G-d's final and supreme authority? They should remember that in the final analysis we are not masters of our destiny, but that G-d is, if we have faith and believe in His existence

CJN is a newpaper that fills a vacuum and is a contribution to freedom and democracy. Let us hope for the best.

UNDESERVED CREDIBILITY

Your correspondent David Lazarus lends undeserved credibility to a Christian missionary group through a number of factual errors in his article (CJN Montreal Jan.5) about their confrontation with members of an Orthodox synagogue in Dollard Des Ormeaux.

As one of the people present, I think it is urgent to point out that most of the members of the Kehillat She'ar Yashuv who confronted members of the Congregation Beth Tikvah were non-Jews. Their "spiritual leader," Percy Johnson, is a Peruvian-born professional Chrisitan missionary. The fact that the men wore tallesim didn't make them Jews, but rather highlighted their mockery of Judaism. Lazarus was wrong to describe them as "a group of Jews."

THE AGENDA FOR 1995

A critical year lies ahead for Israel

By Yeshayahu Anug

The year 1994 was undoubtedly one of the most eventful and baffling in Israel's history. Its achievements in many spheres were remarkable, but it also exposed this country's dilemmas with unprecedented clarity and left many questions unanswered.

Like the unsettled world scene, where the somewhat stable cold war era has collapsed, but the much advertised "new order" remains a daydream, the Middle East too, after having turned its back on decades of futile belligerence, is still unable to transform the mirage of peace into reality. There and here the political leaders are unable to cope with the costs and challenges of the announced transition, They are all struggling for political survival and have little energy left to master the opportunities for change. The results worldwide are confusion, stagnation and even regression.

After these disheartening observations regarding the wider world scene, it must be said that Israel is in relatively better shape than many other societies, but here too the government's popularity is not high.

Israel's ability to act as a military deterent is not only intact, but growing; yet its mighty military build-up cannot cope effectively with the violent outbursts of Islamic extremism. And in the peace process too, the political leadership, though so daring in taking momentous initiatives, fails to handle the opportunities it has itself created.

The state of Israel's economy is better than it was when this government took over more than two years ago. Unemployment is down from 11 to 7.5 per cent, despite a yearly influx of 80,000 new immigrants. Foreign and local investments in infrastructure and in new industries registered a 30 per cent growth.

On the negative side though, during the same period, inflation rose from eight to 14 per cent and the foreign currency deficit from five to eight billion dollars US. The public is losing faith in the erratic financial market.

In effect, Israel has recently become a booming consumer society, with the standard of living going up an impressive 12 per cent, which has benefited many, but it has left the weaker sector of the population unable to cope with the rising cost of living and at the mercy of a weakening welfare network.

Political, military matters

In this confusing situation, the public's worries are being constantly manipulated by the tabloids and the other popular media, all engaged in a merciless war for ratings that thrives on gloomy alarmism. The official messages portray a government in need of clarity of purpose and of adequate tactics. Instead of being reassuring, these messages reflect insecurity in the handling of political-military matters related to both the ongoing peace talks and the various economic, social and even constitutional issues.

This is, I think, a fair picture of the national scene as Israel enters 1995, the one year left for decisive govenment action before the election-year 1996 takes over and either confirms or changes the present government and its course.

Meanwhile, Arab terrorism has scored some points and part of the public, though prepared for the violent struggle of Arab extremism against any attempt at regional peace, is gradually losing faith in the visibility of the peace process.

This sector, once skeptical as to the prospects of the process and its costs — but ready to give it a chance — is now listening to the opposition, which has no rational alternatives to offer, but blames the government's peace initiative for the present wave of terror and for the loss of human lives.

To complete the confusing picture and in sharp contrast to the serious problems that confront the embattled country at this time, petty politics and personal rivalries seem to dominate the scene in all political parties which are nervously preparing for their primaries before the 1996 general elections. Nothing extraordinary in democracies, one can say, but then, this society always tends to over-dramatization, and the result is apathy and disgust with the standards of politics and politicians.

And yet, even in this complicated situation, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin holds the cards he needs to persevere not only in the conduct of the peace process, but also in handling his unruly internal front. Though his teflon lining was recently damaged by some tactical failures for which he must take the blame, he has no serious challenger in his camp.

And like it or not, PLO chief Yasser Arafat, himself threatened by the fanatical extremists in his own house, is still the only conceivable partner for a possible settlement with an entity with which Israel must learn to co-exist, side by side and in mutual respect. This is a frustrating partnership and is unlikely to improve very much. But perhaps a new approach could produce a change.

There are those who now suggest skipping the accident-prone intermediary phases of the Olso accord and negotiating a final resolution of the conflict right away. The rationale and the incentive for such a short-cut is the consideration that both parties will be readier for mutual concessions and trade-offs than they are now, as they limp from one obstacle to another and patch them up with shaky compromises. The chances that such an approach will be adopted by the government are slim, but may improve.

And as 1995 will also test the commitment of Israel and Syria to conciliation, it promises to be a critical year in which daring decisions — one way or the other — will have to be made.

Uneven justice: Ames versus Pollard

By BERT RAPHAEL

The daily press gave broad coverage to the arrest and the subsequent conviction of Aldrich Ames for spying on behalf of the former Soviet Union. What has not been highlighted is the stark comparison between his motives and those of Jonathan Pollard.

Thousands of organizations throughout the world Jewish and non-Jewish and hundreds of thousands of people have written to Bill Clinton calling for Jonathan Pollard's pardon. President Clinton continues to act relying on false and erroneous information supplied by the American State Department. Pollard's continued incarceration is a blemish on the integrity of the American judicial system. The following is a comparison between the Ames and Pollard cases.

FACTS OF THE AMES CASE:

1. Aldrich Ames provided classified information to the Soviet Union while it was in the United States' implacable enemy during the Cold War — for nine years.

2. Ames provided information to the Soviet Union to increase its offensive capabilities against the United States. He betrayed 55 intelligence operations and exposed more than 34 agents.

3. Ames "with intent and reason to believe that it is to be used to the injury of the United States...communicated, delivered and transmitted to representatives of the Soviet Union...information relating to the national defence of the United States to wit: classified CIA operations and classified human asset."

4. Ames' conduct resulted in the deaths of at least 12 United States agents.

5. Ames' sole motive was greed, and he was paid approximately $15 million for his activities.

6. Ames was sentenced to life in prison.

FACTS OF THE POLLARD CASE:

1. Jonathan Pollard provided classified intelligence data to Israel, one of the United States' closest allies.

2. Pollard provided Israel with information to allow Israel to defend itself from hostile nations — particularly Iraq — intent on Israel's destruction.

3. Pollard was only indicted on one count of providing information to a foreign nation. He was not charged with having "knowledge or reason to believe" that his actions would harm the United States.

4. Pollard was never charged with taking actions that harmed United States intelligence agents.

5. Pollard's initiative in assisting Israel arose when the United States began withholding critical defence information from Israel after Iraq's nuclear facility was bombed. He believed his actions were necessary to prevent another Holocaust.

6. Pollard was sentenced to life in prison with recommendation against parole. On November 21, 1994, he began his 10th year in incarceration.

Violence for the sake of violence

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

I have always felt, and I still feel, that we Jews can make a magnificent contribution to our society by resensitizing ourselves and by recognizing that the present moral drifting of our generation will lead us deeper and deeper into pits of inhumanity.

It is no accident that we seem to be reacting more and more to the extremes of life only; extremes when it comes to love, extremes when it comes to human relations. A book which deals with sex must today be explicit, nearly pornographic; otherwise it is apparently not worth reading. The romantic love of yesterday, in which soul clung to soul rather than body to body, is called by our contemporary critics "sentimental mush."

A significant portion of the public devours magazines and "news"papers which display violence, crime and similar nadirs of life as their major offerings, and the publishers have come to fear that the populace will not read their stuff unless such news is prominent. Even the mainstream daily press will headline accidents and mayhem.

Every other TV show indulges in violence. Few are the exhibitions in which someone is not punched or kicked, mutilated, injured or shot. Millions buy the sadistic trash which exalts violent behavior. And then the nation pretends to be shocked over the senseless exhibition of juveniles who seem to love violence for the sake of violence. These juveniles do not live, as we like to believe so often, in a world of their own; they are a reflection of our world, and our world loves violence. To be sure, we adults have acquired certain inhibitions and don't dare to act out this love. But our youngsters do, and we should not be surprised.

Many people are confused and bewildered over certain aspects of modern art with its distortion of the human face and figure, with its abstract presentation of human emotions. But every true art is a reflection of its time, and modern art at its truest is an adequate and accurate reflection of our era. It is distorted and disjointed. Ortega Gasset's analysis of "dehumanized art" reflects the dehumanized person. Our artists will return to a representation of inner beauty and wholeness when moderns return to themselves as persons of human sensitivity.

Having said this, I wonder whether you think back with nostalgia to the days when all of this did not apply. If you do, alas, you are wrong.

The paragraphs above were written by me exactly 35 years ago, in 1959 (actually they were part of a Yom Kippur sermon). I came across this item quite by accident and, I must admit, I read it with some consternation. It brings to mind the saying in Kohelet, that those who believe the former days were better than ours do not speak wisely. And that biblical statement was written more than several thousand years ago.

Postcript: Reuters reported from London (Globe & Mail, Dec. 20, 1994):

Negative television news about crime, death, famine and wars makes people worry more about their own troubles, British psychologist say. Turning off disturbing news may not indicate an uncaring attitude but instead may be a way to preserve one's own mental health, Wendy Jonston of London's City University and Graham Davey of Sussex University told a conference of the British Psychological Society yesterday. "You might imagine that if people watch crime and so on on TV it might put their worries into perspective," Davey said. But instead, it makes people dwell on their own troubles.

Appreciation of nature's force at Tu b'Shevat

Confronting God's creatures in a sun-dappled Toronto ravine

By Jack Chissick

January in Winnipeg, burdened with deep snow and temperatures of -30, is not a month in which one is conditioned to think about trees. Even now, having spent most of my adult life in balmy Toronto, I still can't connect Tu b'Shevat with planting trees. But as a result of a recent experience, I began to reflect on the relationship between people and the rest of God's creations.

One sunny morning after a snowfall had turned the landscape into a canvas of pristine white on white, I took a solitary walk through a wooded ravine which traverses the end of the street where I live. It was still. Nothing was moving, yet I could feel life forms like an enemy hidden behind each tree. And I unexpectedly came upon a trail of small footprints. The footprints led me to a little animal. Nose twitching and ears laid back, its curiosity aroused, it sat watching me as I stopped to watch it. The rabbit that lived in my garden in the summer lives in the ravine in the winter. In spite of the snow cover, with an intelligence I could not comprehend, it had managed to find a breakfast which was spread out before it.

I stood very still in the zebra stripes of light and shadows cast by the naked trees. To my surprise, the rabbit came almost to my feet, bringing with it the little breakfast of greens. It had no fear, laboring under an illusion, believing that animal and human were still living together in the Garden of Eden. It gave me a friendly glance from time to time as it nibbled on the food. This rabbit had not, it seemed, learned very much about humans. Late last summer, with the triumphant enthusiasm of a gladiator, I almost killed the rabbit with a stone, because the creature had dared to feed on the plants in my garden.

In this quiet ravine, my undeclared war was about to be resumed when a sudden feeling of remorse overcame me. This innocent animal with the appealing face wanted very little, a plot of woodland to scamper in, sunlight, moonlight, and some vegetation to chew. It was an edge-of-the-world dweller, caught between a vanishing forest and a diminishing meadow, pre-empted by unpredictable humans who claim the whole earth for themselves. It eyed me nearsightedly, a green leaf in its mouth. Plainly, it had a poorly programmed memory and did not know about the lion and the lamb.

"Run rabbit, run," I wanted to shout. "You are in the wrong universe and must not make this mistake again. I am really a very evil and mean-spirited beast. I throw stones at you." With that, I made an impulsive throwing motion.

It reacted to my signal as if to come closer to me. Then a second thought seemed to cross its mind — a thought telepathically received from the dark world below and before time, a whisper of ancient disasters heard in the depths of its burrow. Perhaps after all, this was not Eden. Nose twitching more rapidly — it retreated into the thicker woods.

As it faded into the shadows, there went with it a natural world, distinct from the world in which we live. The rabbit's haven, while still overgrown with trees was also adorned with man's garbage. It was as if the rabbit had taken the sunlight with it into the shadows. It turned, waiting for me to leave. I continued my walk, relieved and pleased that darkness had not gained on life by any act of mine.

There is a force in nature greater than the power of humans. It is the power inherent in all of God's creatures. It is the power behind the light of the rabbit's world in the ravine at the end of the street on which I live. It is the power that makes the sun rise and set. It is the power that makes forests grow — even if I don't plant trees on Tu b'Shevat.

A poem for Tu b'Shevat

A little boy walked with his father
To plant a seedling in the earth
In a place made ready, nurtured,
And prepared for roots to grow.

From the blue deep sky an infinity above,
Sunlight dropped like feathery reminders
Through spare and barren branches
Onto the wide sheltering shoulders of the father.

And God loved the seedling,
As the father loved the little boy.
With the hand of the father
The boy found his way.

But the compass of time etched its rings in the tree.
Shielding his eyes against the sunlight,
He stared into heaven
As the branches grew bare.

A little boy walked with his father
To plant a seedling near a tree
In a place made ready, nurtured,
Where roots have already grown.

Uncertainty grips Golan settlers

Reporting from the Golan Heights, Sheldon Kirshner speaks to settlers about the past, present and future.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

At the Golan Heights Winery in Katzrin, the largest settlement on this bleak, wind-swept volcanic plateau, it is business as usual.

And at Merom Golan, the oldest settlement on the Golan, the same is true.

Despite gnawing fears by the 13,000 Jewish settlers here that the Israeli government may relinquish the Golan in exchange for a peace treaty with Syria, life goes on undisturbed by the muffled political rumblings.

"We're not throwing up our hands in despair," said Adam Montefiore, the winery's overseas marketing manager. "We have no alternative but to carry on. We're obviously concerned about the government's intentions, but we're very confident — bullish — about the future.

"I don't know whether Israel will give up the Golan. Until then, it's purely hypothetical. In the meantime, we're just too busy to worry. We prefer to deal in certainties. We're keeping our noses to the grindstone."

He added, "The winery has entered a new, exciting phase. What really matters now is the government's interest in our winery."

Established in 1983, and owned by a consortium of four kibbutzim and four moshavim, the company has embarked on a $5 million (US) expansion program that is supposed to triple the capacity of its bottling plant and enlarge its warehouse, barrel room and visitors' centre.

Settlers take solace from the fact that 40 per cent of the cost is being borne by the government — a government which has been preparing Israelis for an eventual withdrawal from the Golan, captured from Syria in the 1967 Six Day War and annexed by Israel in December 1981.

The winery, which has won more than 20 gold medals in international competitions, produces three labels — Yarden, Gamla and Golan. Now Israel's third largest winery, it has captured 15 per cent of the local market and a third of the export trade. Its Cabernet Sauvignons, Chardonnays, Rieslings and Muscats are sold in 15 countries, including Canada. Sales last year reached $8 million. "The winery," said Montefiore, a scion of the fabled British-Jewish family, "is very profitable."

Montefiore ascribes the winery's success to three factors — the energy, spirit, knowledge and ambition of its management, the ideal weather and soil conditions, and its state-of-the-art equipment.

Sammy Bar-Lev

The Syrians, he said, did not cultivate wine grapes on the Golan. However, under the Byzantines and the Romans, the region was a flourishing centre of viniculture.

Montefiore's colleague, Alon Levin, the Israeli marketing manager, takes immense pride in the winery's revival of the ancient tradition of viniculture on the Golan.

A resident of the northern Golan settlement of El Rom, Levin charges that Israelis here feel abandoned by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's Labor government, for which he voted in the last election.

Levin and others cast their ballots for Rabin because they believed he was committed to retaining the Golan. In a speech delivered in Katzrin in 1992, the would-be prime minister declared that an Israeli withdrawal from Golan would jeopardize Israel's security. But now he is seriously toying with the idea of a withdrawal.

Levin is also upset because not a single cabinet minister has bothered to visit the Golan of late to explain Israel's strategy, effectively leaving the settlers in the dark. Yet, he admitted, the government "is not encouraging us to find a new place" behind the Green Line in Israel. "We haven't discussed the possibility of moving."

Alon Levin

Levin is clearly frustrated. A Labor government encouraged idealistic Israelis like himself to settle on the Golan. A native of Ramat Hasharon on the coastal plain, Levin has lived here since 1974. But now the wheel has turned, with all its implications.

Levin is not a wild-eyed hawk. "The Golan is a strategic asset to Israel, even in this age of missiles," he observed. However, he argues that Israel's long-term security can best be assured by peace, not territory.

"Most people up here are willing to leave in exchange for a real comprehensive peace agreement," he explained. "The question is: What do the Syrians mean by peace?"

Like the majority of Golan settlers, Levin is skeptical about Syria's intentions and critical of Syrian President Hafez al-Assad's reluctance to make confidence-building gestures to Israel and to denounce terrorism publicly.

Furthermore, even if an accord is reached, Levin holds that an Israeli pullback should be gradual. At the very least, it should unfold over a 25-year period.

Levin is far from confident that the winery will be able to replicate its success in the Galilee in the event of an Israeli evacuation of the Golan. Neither the soil nor the weather are as favorable for the production of top-quality grapes.

Hard as it may seem, Levin tries not to think of that scenario. As he put it: "It would be the end of a dream."

* * *

Sammy Bar-Lev, the mayor of Katzrin and the head of the Golan Regional Council, exudes optimism and fear.

The town, with 5,000 inhabitants, is growing thanks to an influx of new immigrants, mainly from the former Soviet Union. And as construction cranes which pierce the town's skyline indicate, Katzrin is riding a building boom.

Nevertheless, Bar-Lev is plagued by uncertainty, knowing full well that the current diplomatic process with Syria may yield concrete results. "We're very worried about this and we're struggling against it."

The Golan, he said, is part and parcel of Israel. "It belongs to us, not the Syrians. It's of crucial importance to our security. And we depend on it for 30 per cent of our water."

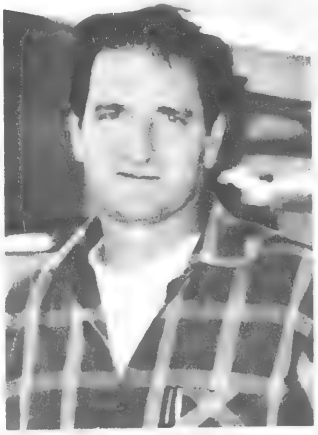
Bar-Lev has no faith in Syrian promises to live in peace with Israel, and he mistrusts Assad.

* * *

Elisha Yelin appears far more resigned to an Israeli withdrawal than Bar-Lev. A colonel in the reserves, he fought as a soldier on the Golan in the Six Day War. Since then, Merom Golan — which is only two kilometres from the Syrian border — has been his home.

With a population of 450, Merom Golan lives off a cowshed, a chicken run, an apple orchard, potato fields (which supply McDonald's restaurants), a quarry and an electric motor factory. Yelin is marketing manager of the latter.

He firmly believes that Israel would be better off keeping the Golan, but he has no illusions. "It looks like we will give it up. The Golan has been sold by Rabin to Assad. The price has yet to be determined."



Elisha Yelin

Yelin does not trust the Syrians, but he maintains that Israel has no alternative but to take advantage of opportunities which may lead to peace with its Arab neighbors.

"Three wars are enough," he said, referring to himself. In addition to the Six Day War, Yelin served in the 1973 Yom Kippur War and the 1982 Lebanon War. "Now we have to give peace a real chance."

The people of Merom Golan are pragmatic and realistic, he said. "They don't want to go down from the Golan, but they realize the situation we're in."

For all practical purposes, he noted, all signs point to an Israeli withdrawal. "It's just a question of time."

Mideast Analysis

By Sheldon Kirshner

Thanks to its historic accord with the PLO last year, Israel has begun to penetrate North Africa, or, as it known in Arabic, the Maghrib.

But for Israel, North Africa is like a garden whose luxuriance depends on external factors. If conditions are favorable, Israel's bilateral relations with such countries as Morocco and Tunisia will flourish. However, if there is a decided lack of progress in the peace process, Israel's budding relationships may well wilt.

Israel and Morocco have ties on the liaison rather than on the ambassadorial level. Accordingly, neither country is allowed to fly its flag over its respective compounds in Tel Aviv and Rabat. Israel's representative in Morocco is David Dadon, whose family was originally Moroccan. Dadon was formerly deputy director of the Maghrib department of the Israel-Arab relations division in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Dadon's counterpart in Israel, Talal Rhoufrani, who has yet to take up his post in Tel Aviv, headed the technical cooperation department in the Ministry of Agriculture and Agrarian Reform.

After years of semi-clandestine links, Israel and Morocco are just now cultivating open, normal relations. Economic interchanges have begun, and the recent Casablanca conference could solidify them.

Tourism is opening up, but no one expects rivers of Moroccan tourists to flood Israel. The flow will be the other way, according to Osnat Bar Yosef, Dadon's successor.

Cultural relations are not expected to develop quickly, she adds. As in Egypt, Morocco's intellectual elite tends to be anti-Israel.

Yet if the peace process thrives, Morocco's ruler, King Hassan, will likely upgrade ties with Israel.

Israel's relations with Tunisia are on a still lower rung. The two countries have agreed to maintain interest offices in the Belgian Embassy in Tel Aviv and Tunis, to be staffed by economic representatives. Officially, each emissary will be considered a Belgian diplomat.

Tunisia's insistence on such low-level relations is a function of its greater sensitivity to the still-unsolved Palestinian problem and its vulnerability to neighboring Libya.

On the other hand, Tunisia doesn't want to get left behind in the evolving peace process. And it feels that Israel can be of inestimable assistance in cracking the American export market.

All in all, the Tunisians are in no hurry to expand ties with Israel. But this, too, could change if, for example, Israel and Syria come to terms.

There have been reports suggesting that Algeria may be the next Maghrib nation to establish relations with Israel. The speculation was fueled by a recent meeting between the Israeli and Algerian foreign ministers in Budapest, and by an official announcement that Algeria intends to rescind its sports boycott against Israel.

But Bar Yosef is not holding her breath: Algeria is so preoccupied with an Islamic fundamentalist revolt that it simply cannot afford to forge a rapprochment with Israel.

Libya seems beyond the pale. As Bar Yosef put it, "For us, Libya is a research topic."

Rabbinical Reflections

By RABBI AARON LEVINE

This week's sedrah, Beshalach, contains the description of the splitting and crossing of the Red Sea.

On Jan. 16, we shall also celebrate the holiday of Tu b'Shevat. My editors have hinted that the two should be discussed. What is the common link? The answer — miracles.

There are those disbelievers who suggest that the parting of the Red Sea was the result of natural events. A strong east wind whipped up the waters, causing them to stand; the wind subsided just as the Israelites had finished passing through the sea; and thus the sea crashed down and drowned the Egyptians who were pursuing them.

The disbeliever will believe anything as long as this gives him an excuse and a rationalization for not having to admit that there is a G-d Who performs miracles. One can propound a lie in the face of facts, but if the lie is stated long enough, many will jump on the bandwagon of its belief if it precludes my having to believe in something I wish not to admit. The Holocaust has been documented, filmed, proven in a myriad of ways — but there are haughty deniers who wish to warp and distort the facts.

Each and every day, the believing and practising Jew, who davens daily, recites three times the Modim prayer in the Shemoneh Esrei: "We shall thank you and relate Your praise for our lives that are entrusted in Your hands; for our souls that are deposited to You; for Your miracles that are with us every day; for Your wonders and favors at all times — evening, morning and afternoon ... "

There are four stages in the hierarchy of G-d's creation. The inanimate, the plant, the animal and the human being. Some call it nature. The sun rises each morning and sets in the evening. Stars larger than earth twinkle millions of miles away in the firmament. Gold, silver, diamonds and many other varied precious stones are mined from the earth. There is fire, water, air and earth. Seeds sprout into huge oak trees or into the California redwoods or the cedars of Lebanon. Thousands of different species of other trees, plants, grasses and herbs, flowers, fruits, and vegetables abound. Thousands of different animals. fish, birds, insects — each a different form, a different color, a different instinct, a different nature — live in different habitats all over the world.

And then the apex of creation — the human being. From what? From a seminal drop. His heart, brain, lungs, eyes, ears, intestinal organs, respiratory system, digestive system, limbs, hair, mouth, teeth, lips, tongue, spine, bones, skin, blood — each a miracle in and of itself that fills thousands of pages of health volumes, and manuals of textbooks to be mastered by the individual specialist in that particular field of endeavor. Millions upon millions of people and no two fingerprints the same, no two voiceprints the same, no two genetically the same.

Rabbi Elchonom Wasserman wrote that in truth, in light of the above miracles we witness daily, it is logically impossible to be an atheist or disbeliever. One must be blind and deaf and mentally unbalanced not to be able to see, hear, and reason that there is an Almighty G-d Who created, and continues each day to sustain creation. But the believer in G-d is subject to Him, His Torah, His demands, His requests, His mitzvot.

Ah! That is different. So I won't believe. That's the way out. I deny. I deny the miracle; therefore I deny the G-d. Then I can deny His divine Torah. And then? Then I can live the way I want to live — unrestrained, uncommanded, unfettered. Free.

But the one who believes, believes that G-d is the author and sustainer of nature. He can suspend at will His laws of nature. Perhaps He preordained that the waters would split at a certain time; that the sun would stand still at a certain time; that the earth would split for Korach; that Bilaam's donkey would speak — and so on.

But there are miracles that are with us every day. Miracles of nature, of science, of medicine, of engineering, of war, of life and of earth. Even the stubborn magicians of Pharaoh acknowledged "the finger of G-d."

Let's open our hearts, our eyes, our souls, our minds — let's unlock the hardened arteries of disbelief. As the Prophet Isaiah says: "The heart of this nation is fat, his ears are blocked, his eyes are closed — lest he see with his eyes, and hear with his ears, and understand with his heart, and have to repent and be healed." (6:10).

Miracles part seas, grow trees, and sustain us at every moment of our lives. Every breath we take is a miracle. The least we can do is acknowledge that fact and express our thanks to the Master of all miracles — our Creator! Good Shabbos and a fruitful Tu b'Shevat.

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

LEVITES

The descendants of Levi, son of Jacob, were assistants to the Kohanim in the ancient Temple in Jerusalem. Not every Levi is a Levite since Levi is also a given name. Halevy — Hebrew for the Levite does describe a genuine Levite.

There are many variations of Levi — Lev, Levin, Levitt, Levitan, and Levinson.

The acronymic surname Segal (S'gan Leviyah), associate of the Levitic order, also denotes a Levite.

SHMOOZIN

"Tu B'Shevat is a Jewish holiday to plant trees, preserve the environment, and eat a vegetarian meal of fruits – isn't it amazing that an ancient religion can be so contemporary!"

Care, morale said down at Cummer Lodge

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Level of care and morale of residents and staff at Cummer Lodge House have gone downhill in the past year, according to officers of the Lodge's Family Council.

However, this opinion is disputed by Leah Walters, administrator, who said the Family Council's view is not the "generalized" one among residents. She also said family members must pitch in to offset problems caused by cut-backs in staff.

"Things are worse now than a year ago," said Sandra Bernknopf, Family Council chair, whose mother, Beulah Silverberg, 85, has Alzheimer's disease. "My mother has gone downhill a lot faster this year and I think it's due to the cut-backs in staff."

This sentiment was echoed by Wilf Allan, the council associate chair, whose mother, Winnifred, also has Alzheimer's disease. "The situation is worse," he said. "The residents are not getting looked after as well, there are so many delays and feeding them is a problem."

The plea by Walters for more family volunteers is not a practical solution in Bernknopf's opinion, except perhaps in the feeding of residents. "My mother is incontinent," she said. "I can't change my mother's diaper. That would be a role reversal; a child becomes a parent."

Though the province and city have agreed to spend $43 million over the next five years in renovating Cummer Lodge, the Family Council fears that standards of care will take second place to establishing an "architectural monument."

Walters said the new Cummer House will have room for 390 residents, 30 fewer than the temporary total of 420 it has had to accommodate at times, but each resident will have a private bath.

The reduction in residents is considered a negative step by Bernknopf, in the face of an aging population and an increase in the demand for beds in homes for the aged. One in five of the population will need such a bed or special care at home, she said.

About 20 per cent of the residents of Cummer Lodge are Jewish (77) according to Walters.

One of the problems in feeding residents is that some are so ill or incapacitated that they stop eating and their trays are taken away in the mistaken notion that they have finished, said Allan.

Walters maintained that the feeding of residents has always been a problem and that it is not any worse than before the staff cut-backs.

Bernknopf said there used to be recreation programs every night but that staff cuts have eliminated all but a bingo on Wednesday evenings and this has affected morale.

Though the council has protested the situation to Health Minister Ruth Grier, it has had no reply from her. One of the council's requests is that its members and residents be used as a resource in drawing up plans for the new Cummer House.

Disabled display courage in face of adversity

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Developing a chronic disability could cause many people to give up hope. But for Ida Skok and Patricia Bregman, it was the beginning of a new life.

They were two of the seven people recently awarded a Courage to Come Back Award by the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, an award which honors people from across Ontario who have demonstrated courage during their recovery from illness, injury or addiction and now serve as role models for others.

Skok, diagnosed as suffering from paranoid schizophrenia in 1977, was also an alcoholic who was in an unhappy marriage for more than 30 years. She turned her life around three years ago however at age 67, when she was told she had cirrhosis of the liver and she would be lucky to live another two or three years.

Ida Skok

Patricia Bregman

Six months later Skok quit drinking. "I just made up my mind and said, that's the end of that. Medication had been controlling my schizophrenia, but without the alcohol it helped even more. I felt stronger than I had in years."

Sitting in her cozy, bright apartment where she lives alone, Skok said it took two more years before she left her husband. "For the first time in my life, I decorated my own home, began cooking and baking and really started to live."

Starting to live also meant practising her religion for the first time.

"I was born in Germany of Jewish parents, but was brought up by Catholics and did not know of my Jewish roots until I was 14 years old," she said. "I married in my husband's church and did not speak about being Jewish until 10 years ago. I started attending Holy Blossom as an observer and now go regularly. I finally found my own identity."

Since her "life began at age 69," Skok has begun to volunteer for the Community Older Person's Alcohol Program, an addiction treatment program for seniors; she is a representative on the Coalition of Services for the Older Person with a Substance Misuse Problem; and she has been a member of the Mayor's Task Force on Drugs and Substance Abuse.

She's also studying Hebrew and attending weekly services.

"I'm planning on joining a fitness and chess club and I'm looking forward to a trip to Israel this spring," she said.

Bregman suffers from familial Mediterranean fever, which causes inflammation of the linings surrounding the gastro-intestinal system, lungs and joints.

Attacks, which can cause severe and disabling pain are unpredictable but tend to occur about once a month. Not allowing the illness to enslave her life, Bregman wrote her bar admission exams from the hospital; during her tenure at the Court of Appeal, she did much of her work from a hospital bed.

"You have to make a choice," she said. "Either [a chronic] illness controls your life or it fits into your life."

During numerous hospital stays, Bregman witnessed first-hand that many patients were unable to speak up for themselves. As a lawyer, she knew she could act as an advocate for the sick and disabled.

"People in hospitals ... are vulnerable. Many times I have needed people; so I feel it is only right to return the favor. I know how the system works and I know that I can use this knowledge to help people by affecting change," she said.

She now works in the field of health law at the Advocacy Resource Centre for the Handicapped (ARCH), which provides legal help for people with disabilities, and she serves on the Advisory Committee on the Regulated Health Professions, which ensures that the public's point of view and interests are presented to the government.

In addition she speaks on improving health legislation for the disabled and is a volunteer for Ability OnLine, a computer bulletin board which allows her to share information, fears and experiences with others.

Bregman credits her upbringing for her strength in dealing with her illness. "My grandfather was confined to a wheelchair yet lived independently, and my father was the vice-president of a rehabilitation centre. I saw that people with disabilities could live well. My way of coping is to do something. It is dangerous to sit at home too long. I have seen people whose lives become their illness but they have a choice — they can live or not live. For me it is a control issue. I work hard to control the rest of my life and to make my body do what I want it to do."

Lithuanian Jews' future said to be bleak

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The death knell for Lithuania's venerable Jewish community has been sounded by one of its former leaders.

Gregory Kanovich, who was chairman of the community for five years until he immigrated to Israel 15 months ago, said its days are numbered.

"I am absolutely convinced that it will vanish within 10 to 15 years," he said in an interview.

Lithuania is home to 5,000 Jews today, the overwhelming majority of whom are 65 or older. Just three years ago, 6,500 Jews lived in Lithuania, which seized its independence from the former Soviet Union in 1991.

Before World War II, Lithuania, with 240,000 Jews, was one of the leading Jewish communities in the Diaspora. Massacred by the Nazis and repressed by the Soviets, Lithuanian Jewry absorbed incredible body blows between 1940 and 1990.

And now, drained by attrition, assimilation and aliyah, the community is on its last legs, in Kanovich's view.

Kanovich, a distinguished novelist and playwright whose books have sold 2½ million copies and have been translated into 11 languages, has visited Lithuania three times in the past year.

According to Kanovich, there is an upsurge of interest in Jewish culture, history and the Holocaust on the part of non-Jews.

When Kanovich last visited the capital, Vilnius (Vilna), his home town, the president and the prime minister of Lithuania both attended a play he had written.

On the other hand, as economic conditions have deteriorated, anti-Semitism has reared its ugly head. "The search for a scapegoat to explain away the hardships currently faced by Lithuania has affected Jews," Kanovich observed.

And the recent arrest of a prominent Jewish businessman who was accused of being an underworld figure has sparked veiled accusations in the press that all Jews are thieves.

Kanovich, a former member of the Supreme Soviet in Moscow, is well acquainted with the recurring phenomenon of anti-Semitism.

Throughout the Communist period, he had trouble finding publishers for his novels, which deal with Jewish life in Eastern Europe from czarist times to World War II. His best known works are Candles in the Wind, There is no Paradise for Slaves and A Lullaby to the Snowman.

And in 1989, he wrote a letter, signed by more than 200 Supreme Soviet members and circulated abroad, asking Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to condemn anti-Semitism. Kanovich met with him, but Gorbachev declined to issue a condemnation.

Kanovich emigrated from Lithuania for a number of reasons.

His father, to whom he was close, died in 1992. The Russian language, his medium, became the target of hostility by Lithuanian nationalists. "My opportunities as a writer were suddenly limited," he explained. "I understand the anger, but I cannot justify it."

And finally, he and his wife, Olga, a retired book editor, wanted to be near their younger son, Sergei, his wife and their ailing son in Kfar Saba.

Kanovich, 65, is glad to be living in Israel. "It's a liberating feeling. I'm hated as a human being, not a Jew."

But Kanovich, who was in Toronto visiting his second son, Dmitri, a computer specialist, is anything but unloved or unappreciated in Israel.

His many readers there recognize and praise him. Two of his novels, There is no Paradise for Slaves and The Goat for Two Farthings, are scheduled to be published in Hebrew this year. His trilogy, Candles in the Wind, appeared in a Hebrew edition in 1992.

"There is a great deal of interest in Israel in my work," said Kanovich. Recently, his novels were the subject of a documentary on Israeli radio.

And now, Kanovich is about to start writing a new novel, his 10th. "I'm very excited about it," he said.

In addition, Kanovich has produced several articles on Soviet immigrant absorption for the Russian press in Israel.

Soviet immigrants face two major problems — difficulty in finding jobs in their chosen fields and, for those over 40, in adapting to Israeli culture.

Kanovich maintains ties with the Lithuanian government. Last October, when Lithuanian Prime Minister Adolfas Slezevicius paid a state visit to Israel, he accompanied him around the country.

Not unexpectedly, Kanovich is still in the process of perfecting his Hebrew. "One has to learn the language," he said. "It's an expression of love for the country."

Surprisingly, none of his novels has been translated into English, and therefore, North American readers know precious little about him.

But he is looking for an able translator — someone who can plumb the depths of his rich literary imagination.

Community volunteer murdered on vacation

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

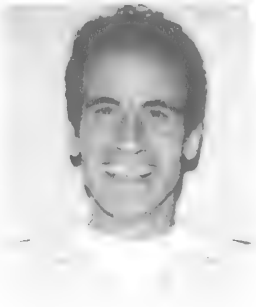
TORONTO — A Canadian man murdered during an apparent robbery in the Dominican Republic was buried Sunday, while authorities continued their search for a suspect.

Jeffrey Secter, 36, a Toronto businessman and active community volunteer, was buried in his hometown of Calgary with over 400 people in attendance. He was on a solo two-week vacation when he was killed Dec. 31 while jogging outside the resort town of Juan Dolio.

External Affairs officials said Dominican police have given "top priority" to the murder investigation. "Police authorities are wasting no effort in trying to resolve this problem," said a spokesperson.

Earlier media reports of an arrest proved untrue.

Secter, who moved to Toronto



Jeffrey Secter

12 years ago, was remembered by those who knew him as a generous man who valued his relationships with others.

"He would do anything for anybody," said business associate Louis Noordan last week. "Knowing him made everybody a better person."

Secter had recently sold his interest in a North York job placement firm to concentrate on charity work with children.

Noordan, along with Secter's former partner Dan Yolleck, said they were "furious" about rumors circulating in the Dominican Republic that the murder was a contract killing ordered from Canada.

"It's a blatant attempt to make a very, very bad situation look better to the tourist industry," Noordan said.

Secter, a computer science graduate, had founded the charity Friday's Child, and was an active volunteer at Bloorview Childrens Hospital, where he would take the severely disabled residents on outings to shopping malls, the circus and musicals like Miss Saigon.

"He was very in touch with children, and they with him," said sister-in-law Marina Paperny from Calgary last week. "My two children lost more than an uncle, they lost a friend."

Secter, a member of Beth Tikvah synagogue since 1988, was also active in B'nai Brith, where he was vice-president of the Toronto Freedom Lodge and chair of community volunteer services.

Lodge president Mark Klein said his friend of eight years "always had a positive outlook. He just rolled up his sleeves [when something needed to be done] and didn't care who might be around to help him."

Secter, an avid runner and baseball player, was involved with the annual Baycrest Challenge for five years, rounding up volunteers for the finish line of the fundraising race.

The Calgary funeral service was presided over by Rabbi Geoffrey Haber of Conservative Beth Tzedec synagogue. Chapel director Labie Doctor said about half of the overflow crowd of 400 then travelled to the cemetery.

Secter, who was divorced, leaves parents Cliff and Ruth, brothers Shep and his wife Marina Paperny, and Danny and his wife Mary Ann Hutchings, and four nieces and nephews, all of Calgary.

A memorial service was scheduled for Jan. 10 at Beth Tikvah Synagogue.

Windsor student group axes president's post

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

WINDSOR — It may not cut as deeply as the guillotine's blade in revolutionary France, but members of the Windsor Jewish Students' Organization (WJSO) at the University of Windsor have decided they no longer want a president.

"It's a more egalitarian approach. The students wanted to de-emphasize titles and hierarchy," said Alan Juris, executive director of the Windsor Jewish Federation, in a phone interview.

"Before, the hierarchy pretty well decided what was going on for the organization. Now the organization is deciding."

Mark Hecht, coordinator of student services for the WSO (formerly the Jewish Students' Council), said members are working in committees. The 24-year-old law student is employed by the federation to liaise with the campus community.

The new WJSO system, which came into effect in September, seems to be working well. Programming is up from once a month to almost once a week, said Juris.

To the best of Hecht's knowledge, the system is unique among Canadian Jewish campus organizations, but he says it's "a trend Americans are starting to use."

"A lot of people have a lot of different talents," said second-year student Jennifer Strul. "If we all work together, there's a better chance of increasing the number of people who come out to events."

The university has an estimated 300 Jewish students out of a total student population of 10,000. The Jewish community of Windsor numbers about 1,800.

The WJSO is working with the university's Canadian Jewish Law Students' Association chapter to strengthen programming, and sends mailings to Jewish student organizations in Ann Arbor (45 minutes away) and nearby Detroit, Mich.

Bagel brunches and Shabbat dinners, either on campus or at the JCC, are a mainstay of WJSO programming. Movie nights, often featuring movies with Jewish themes such as A Stranger Among Us or School Ties, have also proved popular.

Discussion is lively at a meeting of the WJSO recruitment subcommittee. At left is Mark Hecht.

Upcoming programs include ice skating with Hillel of Metro Detroit, a Yom Ha'atzmaut student parade, and a trip to the Holocaust Memorial Museum in West Bloomfield, Mich.

First-term programs included lectures by judges Saul Nosanchuk and John Laskin, participation in an interfaith program called Can You Pray for an "A?", and a reading of War Memories: I Remember Like Now, a new book by local Holocaust survivor Chaim Goldberg.

Ongoing events include a basketball league and a half-hour radio show on CJAM (91.5 FM), the campus radio station.

Hecht sees much of the WJSO's role as educational, both for the Jewish and non-Jewish communities. "People from small towns might not be aware of the holidays other than the High Holidays," he said.

This year the organization successfully interceded when law school registration was scheduled for Rosh Hashanah, and last year provided candles and chanukiot for Chanukah. "A lot of people called and said that their parents had [lit candles] many years ago and that they wanted to get back into it," Hecht said.

Para-Chaplaincy Training Program
"BRINGING A SPARK OF JEWISH WARMTH"

Chaplaincy Services is looking for a few very special individuals to deliver pastoral care to Jews isolated from the Jewish community.

After completing a comprehensive training program, para-chaplains will bring a needed spark of Jewish warmth to those they encounter. This course will develop the skills required to work effectively in chaplaincy. Communication skills, understanding the aging process, confidentiality, how to emphasize the Jewish identity of the patient/resident despite the locale and much more.

Training sessions will be held on seven consecutive weeks, beginning Monday, February 6, 1995. Limited enrolment.

Interested individuals should contact Rabbi Ronald Weiss, Director of Chaplaincy Services (416) 638-7800 edxt. 217

Associated opens campus north of Steeles Avenue

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

VAUGHAN — After years of planning, promises and portables, Associated Hebrew Day Schools' long-awaited Thornhill campus opened Jan. 3 to the relief of hundreds of Jewish families north of Steeles Avenue.

"This is a great day for education, for children and for the community," enthused Vaughan Mayor Lorna Jackson, on hand for the first day of classes.

"These first children have studied under difficult conditions and it's a pleasure to see them finally in a real building."

Jackson was refering to the small white portables adjacent to the Promenade Shopping Centre that have served some 2,800 Associated students since 1988.

The new campus, a massive tan brick structure with green trim, is operating at only half-capacity, meaning that roughly 500 children in the Beit Hayeled preschool and in grades 1 and 2 are in attendance.

Thanks to what school officials are calling a major financial donation, the campus will be dubbed the Jack and Buschie Kamin Education Centre. A formal dedication will take place in the spring.

The 100,000-sq.ft. building, located at Atkinson Avenue and Rosedale Heights Boulevard, is touted as being at the cutting edge of Jewish educational facilities. It houses 31 classrooms, several seminar rooms, a computer room, nine nursery and kindergarten classes, a library and a cavernous underground gymnasium.

Portables give way to permanence

"It's everything you can want in an elementary school," principal Sandy Rabinowitz said last week.

The campus, built at estimated cost of $9 million, will house 1,100 students from preschool to Grade 6 when it's at full capacity this September. It also means an end to the portables, whose sites belong to the City of Vaughan.

Because of crowding at Associated's Hurwich (Finch) campus, two lower classes from there have been moved to the Thornhill campus.

Meantime, Associated's junior high schools continue at both the Neptune and Danilack (Leslie) branches.

And plans call for the following:

- Renovating the Hurwich (Finch) campus to accommodate a junior high school. Come September, Hurwich students who live north of Steeles and west of Yonge Street will attend the new campus;
- Renovating the Leslie branch to house Associated's administrative offices, now at the Neptune campus;
- And tearing down the Neptune campus to replace it with a smaller building that will house a preschool and elementary classes. Part of the site is to be sold and, organizers envision, used to erect subsidized housing units.

That plan hinges on approval from Ontario's housing ministry, which is currently considering the bid.

Earlier this year, Associated's board of directors authorized a bank loan of up to $6.5 million in order to finish the Thornhill campus. At the same time, there has been an aggressive public fundraising campaign.

TU B'SHEVAT PROGRAM

Tu b'Shevat has arrived at Netivot HaTorah Day School and with it the kick-off to a special program in preschool. From left: Eitan Ulmer, Devorah Libman, Eliyahu Wajchendler and Jacqueline Zins show off their Tu b'Shevat tree and their JNF blue boxes. The money collected daily in the classroom pushkas has been designated to specific projects. Each project will be described to the youngsters as they are encouraged to contribute to worthy causes in Israel. The JNF, Keren Kayemet, is a recipient of all the monies collected during the months of Tevet and Shevat. The custom of planting trees in Israel in honor of Tu b'Shevat became the highlight of this important project. Each leaf displayed on this classroom tree represents funds collected for tree planting in Israel.

Kolel course kicks off

Leslie Robbins

TORONTO — A night of Jewish storytelling will kick off Kolel's week-long winter study course Jan. 21.

Leslie Robbins will read Tales from the Beyond, including Jewish folklore classics like The Chazzan in Hell, at the Zionist Centre on Marlee Avenue.

Kolel: A Centre for Liberal Jewish Learning is presenting the Beyond the Beyond minicourse at locations across Metro Toronto. Programs include mourning customs, ethical wills, euthanasia and reincarnation in the Kabbalah. Each course is $8, or $35 for five.

The annual minicourse was designed by Kolel director Rabbi Elyse Goldstein to give adults "a taste" of Jewish study. Almost 350 people attended last year's programs.

Call 905-709-1900 for more information.

Sunquest gearing up

"For the moment, El Al's service continues as always," he told The CJN. "Everything is business as usual."

Now that Sunquest is gearing up to offer charters to Israel, travel industry insiders expect the price of a flight to drop; they also expect more Canadians than ever to visit Israel in this era of peace initiatives and opening borders in the Middle East.

Although Ruth Ben-Tzur, director of the Israel Government Tourist Office in Toronto, would not comment on the approval of Sunquest's application, she told The CJN: "I always said that providing more choices to the Canadian consumer will enhance the numbers of visitors to Israel."

An Israeli in Tunisia

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — As an Israeli businessman visiting Tunisia, Uriel Domb wasn't sure how he'd be received. Would the local Jews be wary about being seen with him in public? How would the Arab population take to someone from a country with which, technically, it was still at war?

Recently returned from an eight-day visit to the North African nation, Domb said he was favorably impressed by the confidence of the Jewish community and by the reception from the Arab population.

Most Tunisians, when they learned he was Jewish, immediately associated him with the ancient community of Djerba, he said, even though only one-third of the country's estimated 3,000 Jews reside in that island community.

The bulk of the country's Jews live in the capital, Tunis, where he spent most of his visit. "The Tunisians' first reaction was that they'd never seen an Israeli before. Nine-tenths were very friendly and some regretted that [many] Jews left, saying 'We treated them a lot better than the Europeans did during World War II,' " Domb said.

Based in Toronto, Domb owns Telespace Ltd., a hi-tech satellite consulting firm that helps clients launch communications satellites. He was in Tunisia as part of a Canadian delegation attending a telecommunications conference.

Domb spent half of his visit touring Tunis and the surrounding coastal areas where the Jewish community vacationed.

Three synagogues in capital

Domb said many Tunisian Jews who fled following the 1956 Sinai campaign have relatives in Montreal, France and Israel. "I experienced no hostility at all for being Israeli."

He did notice that among average Tunisians, "the force of Israel has reached mythical proportions" and there is still "residual resentment" among some that Israel once bombed PLO headquarters in Tunis.

Domb said he was impressed by the Jewish community's vitality and their open identification. He could discern no restrictions on religious practice or on Jewish education.

There are three functioning synagogues in the capital as well as a Hebrew school, run by a Lubavitcher rabbi, that serves dozens of children. Outside the school, however, armed police patrol the area. "It's not to protect the Jews from the general population, which seems to have very good relations from the Jews," but from potential terrorist attacks, Domb said.

While the Jews of Djerba are generally considered observant, those in Tunis appear less so in keeping with the attitude of the general population: "Tunisians are as Muslim as Canadians are Christian," Domb said.

Although there seems to be a lot of intermarriage, people are very conscious of their Jewishness, he added.

Tunis once boasted its own kosher restaurant — which many non-Jews used to frequent — but it recently went out of business. Local entrepreneurs are considering opening a new one to serve an expected influx of Israeli visitors as relations improve. Israel has announced it will establish a liaison office in Tunis and the Tunisians will do the same in Israel.

Most of the Jews Domb met were middle class professionals or merchants with market stalls. Many have had those stores for generations, working primarily in the jewelry business.

When word got out that a Jewish visitor was in the market, many Jewish merchants came out to meet with him. Domb was led around the market by Maurice Sarfati, known to locals as "king of the shuk."

The local Jews are interested in news about Israel but the government-controlled media is not up-to-date.

"Even though it's a small community, it's still a lively one and people are not living under suppression or fear," Domb said. "People were free to do anything as long as they don't criticize the government. But that goes for all Tunisians. For the Jews, there's no reason to criticize the government because it protects them."

'This government has to be brought down'

Efrat rabbi warns of Israeli civil war

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — "A cruel war" will occur between West Bank settlers and the government of Israel if Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin again tries to halt the expansion of settlements there, predicted an outspoken leader of the West Bank community of Efrat here last week.

Before such a war erupts, "this government has to be brought down," Rabbi Shlomo Riskin said at a news conference last Wednesday.

Rabbi Riskin, a former New Yorker who is now the Chief Rabbi of Efrat, flew here last week in the wake of the controversy involving his community.

Efrat's plans to construct 500 new housing units on a nearby hilltop were thwarted when the Israeli government decided to halt the expansion project.

The government reached its decision after Palestinians, who claimed the land belonged to a nearby Arab village, warned that the expansion project was a violation of the Palestinian self-rule accord and could disrupt the peace process.

The government reached a compromise with the settlers to expand on land closer to their community, in an area known as Givat Hazayit.

Rabbi Riskin asked American Jews to stop contributing money to any agency connected to the government of Israel, including the United Jewish Appeal.

He said Jews should send their money "directly to projects in Judea and Samaria."

Rabbi Shlomo Riskin

Rabbi Riskin expanded on a pledge first made last month that Efrat's residents are prepared to take up arms in a militia of "citizen guardians."

He said they would go to battle if the government tries to stop the expansion of any of the territories' settlements, removes the Israeli army from any of the area's cities, including Bethlehem, or agrees to give the Golan Heights to Syria.

Asked about his apparent change in attitude toward elements of the peace process, Rabbi Riskin said, "I have not become radicalized. "I have remained where I am, and the government has gone to such other lengths."

One of Efrat's leaders to negotiate with Rabin during recent night-long meetings, Rabbi Riskin accepted the compromise with the government, but he was clearly not happy about it.

The original site Efrat had slated for its expansion, Givat Hatamar, is better suited for building, the rabbi said.

In addition, he said, "the Arabs are building all over Judea and Samaria."

"On this issue we are going to the barricades," said Rabbi Riskin, who headed Manhattan's Lincoln Square Synagogue before making aliyah.

"If we have no right to build on Israeli land in Efrat, the precedent would be established that we have no right to Judea and Samaria and that would mean a return" to the pre-1967 borders, which closed Jews off from access to Jerusalem, the rabbi said.

The reason he chose to immigrate to Efrat, he said, was because "Efrat will always be the gateway to Jerusalem. If Efrat falls, Jerusalem falls."

Thousands attend funeral of Israeli terror victim

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Thousands flocked last Sunday to the six-hour funeral procession for Ofra Felix, the 20-year-old Hebrew University student from Eilon Moreh killed by terrorists last Friday in a drive-by shooting.

About 3,000 people attended an hour-long service at Jerusalem's funeral parlor in the morning. After the service, mourners boarded buses and cars and followed the blue-shrouded body to Eilon Moreh, where Felix was buried.

Felix was killed when her car was fired on by terrorists traveling in another car near Ramallah. A second passenger was wounded.

Menahem Felix, Ofra's father and a founder of Gush Emunim said "We have good children." "Now we have a martyr. Dear G-d, stop this horrible thing. Give us another government, a government that will defend the people of Israel, not lean on the Gentiles. Get rid of them [the government]," he pleaded.

Rabbi Haim Druckman, however, was not so reserved. Rabbi Druckman, like Menahem Felix, was among the earliest leaders of Gush Emunim. "It is impossible today not to scream out," he said, his voice shaking with emotion.

Among those at the funeral were a number of Knesset members, the leadership of the settlement movement, Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert, and Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Yisrael Meir Lau.

Compensation claim rejected

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — The heirs to the family that built Nazi-era concentration camp crematoria will have their claims for compensation rejected, Germany's justice minister announced recently.

Sabine Leutheusser-Schnarrenberger sent a letter to Berlin's mayor, Wolfgang Luder, saying the heirs to the J.A. Topf and Sons company are not eligible for the restitution they claim because the factory was used to manufacture the "murder machinery of the extermination camp."

The German government has already rejected a petition to have the factory site and other assets returned to the heirs.

The factory site, located in the eastern industrial city of Erfurt, was seized by the Soviets in 1948. Under current German law, land confiscated between 1945 and 1949 by Communist authorities in what would later become East Germany, cannot be returned.

But the Topf family is still seeking financial restitution for the seized property, which is valued at more than $2 million (US).

Jewish officials brought the issue to Luder "because he has been sympathetic to Jewish concerns," said Elan Steinberg, executive director of the World Jewish Congress, which has been pursuing the matter.

Luder, who is also a member of the German Parliament, wrote to the justice minister in September, questioning whether the Topf family claim was valid.

In the letter, Leutheusser-Schnarrenberger assured the Berlin mayor that "payments will not be granted" if, among other reasons, "the claimant, or whomever from whom the claimant derives his rights," acted "against the principles of human rights or state rights."

This, wrote the justice minister, "should be valid concerning Topf and Sons.

"The cremation systems it developed and the crematoriums it built for mass extermination in Auschwitz were a substantive contribution to maintain in force the murder machinery of the extermination camp, since several thousand bodies had to be eliminated every day.

"The claim for compensation will therefore also have to be rejected," the justice minister wrote.

Costa Rica censures 'Jewish power' article

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — The Costa Rican government last month took the unusual step of denouncing a cover story appearing in this Central American country's leading weekly news magazine as one that "could produce anti-Semitic feelings."

The latest issue of Rumbo magazine, published by the largest newspaper company in the country, features a cover story titled "Jewish Power."

The article focuses on the political and economic clout supposedly wielded by the small Jewish community here.

Star of David

The magazine cover boasts a large blue Star of David and includes the sub-headline, "They are few, they do not exceed 2,500 people, but they penetrated Costa Rica's most important circles of power."

The cover also points out that "in industry, 25 businesses have Hebrew directorship" and that four Costa Rican banks are Jewish-run.

On the same day the magazine hit newsstands, the nation's cabinet voted to condemn the magazine story as "absolutely contrary to the Costa Rican way of life."

The article "ignores history and forgets the tragic moments humanity has lived due to the creation and growth of anti-Semitic feelings," the cabinet said in a statement read by a visibly angry Presidency Minister Elias Soley.

"We express to the directorship of Rumbo our deeply felt disapproval of this publication that could produce anti-Semitic feelings," the president said.

Magazine director Aixa Saborio said the magazine "had no bad intentions" in running the article. She added that she did not understand the government's criticism.

The influence of the Jews "is a reality that cannot be hidden," she said. "Being so few, they are very entrenched in the political and economic life of the country."

Costa Rica's second vice president, Rebecca Grynspan, one of several prominent Jews mentioned in the article, described the report as dangerous.

"The article's content does not ponder how, in a country as ample as Costa Rica, a group can effectively come here and prosper, which is a positive aspect.

"Instead they present it as if in Costa Rica, there is a group that has more than it deserves," she said. "And that I see as being dangerous and prejudicial."

Her husband, Legislative Deputy Saul Weisleder, the most prominent spokesman for Costa Rica's Jewish community and a leader in the governing National Liberation Party, said he thought the article was mostly objective and "in some ways has a favorable tone."

But, he added, "it is very unfortunate that the magazine has taken up this subject and especially the headline, which is what the greatest number of people read, which reminds us of black pages from the European and particularly German press from the Nazi regime."

The largest Jewish migrations to Costa Rica came in the period between the two world wars. Most of the people named in the article are second-generation Costa Ricans descended from Polish Jews.

The country's vice president and a cabinet minister are members of the Jewish community — as are two deputies in the Legislative Assembly, the heads of some of the larger importing and construction firms and the presidents of four private banks.

One member of the community, Luis Fishman, is considered a front-runner for the opposition Social Christian Unity Party's 1998 presidential nomination.

Costa Rica has long maintained warm ties with Israel.

Unresolved plane bombing angers Panamanian Jews

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

PANAMA CITY — Nearly six months after the bombing of a small Panamanian commuter plane in which 21 people, including 12 Jews, died, authorities still do not know whether the attack was the work of Islamic fanatics or Colombian drug thugs out to kill one specific Jew aboard the plane.

The lack of answers has led to frustration, anger and a certain degree of paranoia among Panama's 8,000 Jews, most of whom are well-off and very religious.

At Congregation Shevet Achim in Panama City's Bellavista neighborhood, three teen-age boys stood guard one recent afternoon, suspiciously eyeing two Jewish visitors who had asked to meet with the rabbi.

When community leader Ruben Abadi finally came out, he would not let the visitors in and he refused to discuss the bombing.

"The press has taken all our comments out of context. I'm not talking to any more journalists," Abadi snapped, turning his back on the visitors and retreating into the synagogue.

Joseph Harari, president of Shevet Achim and chairman of the Latin American section of B'nai B'rith International, later apologized for the incident.

But he said it illustrates the pain felt by Panama's Jews in the wake of the worst tragedy ever to hit the close-knit community.

The bombing in Panama occurred one day after a powerful bomb ripped apart the Buenos Aires offices of Argentina's central Jewish organization, killing nearly 100 people.

Harari said Latin America's Jews "need a pledge from each country that economic involvement with terrorist-spawning states will not take precedence over the life interest of the public at large."

Neither the White House nor agencies investigating the July 19 crash have any solid answers.

"Among the Jews there is a sense of despair," said Harari, a Panama City businessman who lost a nephew in the attack.

Islamic radicals, Medellin drug lords considered suspects

The Alas commuter plane, carrying 21 people on a 70-km flight from Colon to Panama City, crashed in mountainous terrain shortly after takeoff.

Aboard were 12 Jews — including four Israelis — who ran businesses in the Colon Free Zone, which annually ships about $11 billion worth of electronics, liquor, designer clothing and other luxury goods from the Far East to Latin America.

Four non-Jewish Americans were also killed in the crash.

The Lebanese-based Party of God terrorist group immediately claimed responsibility for the bombing. Panama's Civil Aeronautics Board launched an investigation, bringing in the FBI, the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration and Israel's Mossad.

To date, the investigation has centered on Lya Jamal, a Lebanese national who was on the plane and whose body was the only one left unclaimed after the crash.

Panama's leading newspaper, La Prensa, recently reported that Jamal refused to give airline employees a local address when purchasing his ticket, and that he had entered Panama illegally.

"Our contacts with intelligence organizations give us the general impression that this is linked with the Middle East, above all because of the type of explosive utilized in this attack," Harari said.

Yet some prominent Panamanians have suggested that the attack was not aimed at Jews in general, but against one Jew in particular, Saul Schwartz, who reportedly was under investigation by Italian authorities for his alleged links to the Medellin, Colombia cocaine cartel.

A few weeks before the crash, said Harari, someone planted a bomb in the car of a cousin, Alan Schwartz, but no one was injured in that attack.

According to La Prensa publisher Roberto Eisenmann, "Saul Schwartz was definitely in the hanky-panky business. There were people in the free zone who wouldn't get on the same plane with Schwartz."

According to Eisenmann, "Most of the Jewish community would prefer to call it an anti-Semitic act than to accept that one of their own was involved in drug trafficking."

What is not clear, however, is why a suicide bomber would be sent to assassinate a single person.

On the other hand, if the point was to attack Panamian Jews in general, there were much easier targets, such as the Jewish community centre, or the free zone itself.

Regardless of the motive, security has been noticeably tightened at all Panamanian airports in the months since the disaster, and authorities have stepped up immigration controls at Tocumen International Airport outside Panama City.

Vigilance at Panama's three synagogues is also evident. At Shevet Achim, for instance, only members of those known to the community are allowed in for daily prayers.

"Until we have some sort of hard evidence, we can't really make a judgment," Harari said, suggesting that the bombing was almost certainly the work of Middle East terrorists.

"We're not saying it is or it isn't, though everything seems to point to that direction."

Jewish marriage forbidden for thousands of Israelis

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Couples planning to marry in Israel may soon encounter an unpleasant surprise.

Israeli Radio reported recently that the Religious Affairs Ministry has compiled a list of some 10,000 people who, for a variety of reasons, are forbidden by Jewish law to marry.

Rabbinic approval

The report said, by way of example, that the rabbinate might declare a person illegitimate, and therefore ineligible to marry under Jewish law if documents cannot be found substantiating the faith or fate of a grandparent.

Before a couple can marry in Israel, the union must be approved by the rabbinate.

The report said the names on the list were gathered from government agency files and the rabbinate.

Ze'ev Rosenberg, director-general of the Religious Affairs Ministry, said those people whose names appeared on the list have been informed.

But some people told Israel Radio that they only discovered they were on the list when they began filing marriage applications.

Rosenberg also refuted claims that there are 10,000 names on the list.

He said there were only 4,000 — of which about 400 are based on claims the individuals are illegitimate.

He said a name may also appear on the list because a person did not receive a religious divorce. Any of the rabbinical rulings could be appealed, he added.

Sephardi Chief Rabbi Eliahu Bakshi-Doron meanwhile said the rabbinate was the sole source responsible for names on the list.

He said most of the cases simply required clarification, and that the work of the rabbinate is carried out with discretion and in full accordance with the law.

But Jerusalem city council member Anat Hoffman, of the left-wing Meretz bloc, took issue with the list.

She called it a pure violation of Israel's Basic Laws on an individual's right to liberty.

"I plan to take this to court," she told Israel Radio. "I would like to know what right they have to collect names and information about people without their knowing, and how they decide when to make it public."

The women's group Na'amat called on Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to find an alternative for those couples unable to wed in accord with Halachah.

Ofra Friedman, chair of Na'amat, said that if no solution is found, then civil marriages should be recognized in Israel.

Peres, Arafat continue talks

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat were scheduled this week to meet at the Erez checkpoint, under the cloud of new settlement disputes, terror attacks, and last week's fatal clash between soldiers and the Palestinian Police.

Prisoners, security, settlements, and redeployment are expected to be discussed.

Arafat and Peres last met on December 21 in Arafat's office in Gaza City and agreed to a two-tier format: one forum for discussion of elections and another for issues relating to security and redeployment.

Redeployment, considered to be the stickiest issue delaying the holding of elections, is to be discussed between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Arafat, and their emissaries, including Peres and PA Planning Minister Nabil Shaath.

Shaath, who met with Peres in Cairo last week in the framework of the Higher Liaison Committee, said after the weekly meeting of the PA Saturday that in Cairo he and Peres had discussed "the schedule for negotiating the redeployment of the Israeli army out of Palestinian towns and villages in the West Bank."

El Al suspends Russia flights

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — El Al Airlines has suspended flights to and from Russia because the Russian authorities are refusing to permit El Al security personnel to carry weapons.

"We decided to cancel the flight following changes in our standard security procedures which were forced upon us by the Russians," a spokesman for Israel's national carrier said last week.

"El Al will not operate flights to a destination in which our security procedures are compromised," he added.

The suspension went into effect last Wednesday, amid stiff diplomatic protests from Jerusalem to Moscow over the Russian measure, which was taken over the weekend without warning.

Israeli sources said it was unclear whether the measure was directed specifically against El Al or if it was a general security action connected with heightened tensions in Russia caused by the ongoing conflict in the breakaway republic of Chechnya.

El Al maintains strict security for all its flights, with armed security guards aboard its planes and at airport check-in counters.

The airline flies three times a week to Moscow and once a week to St. Petersburg.

B.C. police unit to examine right-wing/anti-abortion links

One report said the Liberty Net, a telephone hotline that often plays racist messages, "targeted" a member of a pro-choice organization for publicly linking the ultra-right with the anti-abortion movement.

In one recent report, the Vancouver Sun cited Ann Molloy, president of the Victoria Pro-Life Society, as denying "real links" between the ultra-right and anti-abortionists, "but echoed a common far-right theme — that the Holocaust is a myth."

The Sun said Molloy wrote about the 1992 deportation from Canada of British Holocaust denier David Irving in The Interim, an anti-abortion newspaper, portraying Irving as "a victim of political correctness."

The Sun added that Barry Wray, president of the Pro-Life Society in Melville, Sask., was a regular protester outside Vancouver's Everywoman's Health Centre until he moved to Saskatchewan four years ago.

Wray admitted he is "an associate" of Wolfgang Droege, leader of the neo-Nazi Heritage Front, and that he attended a 1986 Aryan Nations meeting in Hayden Lake, Idaho, a centre of neo-Nazi activity.

Wray was arrested in Vancouver in 1990 with former Ku Klux Klan member Al Hooper and Liberty Net operator Tony McAleer, although assault charges were dropped.

In his interview with the Sun Wray boasted of his association with pro-Nazi publisher Ernst Zundel. "To me," he was quoted as saying, "Zundel is like a father figure."

Allan Dutton of The Canadian Anti-Racism Education and Research Society said there is "no doubt" that the anti-abortion movement and the extreme right overlap.

Meanwhile, Gabelman said he has asked his staff to report immediately on what is being done to protect abortion service providers.

He is considering the possibility of establishing no-protest security zones — or "bubble zones," as they are known in the United States — around abortion clinics, but the legality of such zones must first be studied, he said.

Vanoucover police spokesperson Anne Drennan told The CJN the police have set up a task force to investigate the Romalis case, but she emphasized that a regular police investigation is being conducted, separate from the attorney general's unit.

Drennan said stories in the Vancouver media linking the anti-abortion movement with racists have not come from the police. The reports are being considered as rumors, she said.

Canadian Jewish Congress Pacific region executive director Erwin Nest said he has been contacted by the police for information. But he said that while he is fully prepared to cooperate with the police, Congress has no specific information about the alleged links.

The B.C. Medical Association has offered a substantial reward for information about the Romalis case, he said.

A smoking treatment centre

Have you done everything you thought possible to quit smoking, yet you are still lighting up?

Pliamm Smoking Treatment Centre at 7131 Bathurst St. in Thornhill may be the last place you need to go.

Dr. Lew Pliamm

Dr. Lew Pliamm, who graduated with honors from the University of Toronto Medical School and completed his residency in family medicine at McMaster University, is currently staff medical consultant at the Addiction Research Foundation Smoking Cessation Clinic, where he has both clinical and academic duties.

"I find it mind-boggling that so little is being done about something that is killing so many people. Smokers not only lose seven years of quality life, they have an increased risk of heart, lung or kidney disease. I can't believe that people can still walk into stores and buy cigarettes. They are as unhealthy as heroin or cocaine."

The centre, fully covered by OHIP, accepts patients by self-appointment or referral and offers services that include one-on-one psychotherapy, group therapy, buddy systems, nicotine replacement prescription and a full medical evaluation including carbon monoxide monitoring and pulmonary function.

"It is important to realize that we do not take patients away from their family doctors, but work in conjunction with them. The average family doctor does not have the time to work with a patient on a smoking habit. We keep in touch with the doctor through regular correspondence so he always knows what is going on."

Pliamm says the first thing he does when he sees a new patient is check their lung capacity and discuss their motivation about quitting smoking.

"I spend about 40 minutes with each patient allowing them to voice their opinions and express their concerns. We then work out a stop-smoking plan tailored to fit individual needs and decide on a quitting date. They can then come in as often as they want to join groups, meet me individually or speak to a buddy. Group meetings are modelled on other addiction programs. Everyone supports each other."

He says he decided to open a smoking treatment centre after giving lectures at a hospital. "I realized that people joined these programs and then had nowhere to turn when they ended. The craving for a cigarette did not end just because the course ended. People need somewhere to go for as long as they feel is necessary. Our centre is ongoing. We never say time is up and we never take money. As a result we get good results because people feel motivated to keep coming."

Jewish Singles Registry "Network" – A definite success

Without a doubt if you are single, the place to be is the Jewish Singles Registry. With a network membership of over 2,300 singles in both Toronto and Montreal, and another 250 in Ottawa, the Registry concept has swept Eastern Canada with a romance. It still continues to grow at an exciting pace.

"Word of mouth is the best form of advertising" says Dora Korzinstone, the Registry's founder and counsellor in Montreal. "People who are happy with the service tell their friends, and those friends tell their friends and so on."

"The concept is quite simple and it works" states Rob Singer from his Registry office in Toronto. "Our members select for themselves who they want to go out with, based on biographies, profiles and photographs. No blind dates here. With membership constantly increasing there are always new people to choose from."

What makes the network so special is the close ties between the two cities. "There is a very close working relationship which evidently filters down to the members." says Sandy Danovitch, co-director in Montreal. "Once you are a member in one particular city, you have free access to the files in the other two, and are welcome to visit the other offices whenever you please. Many relationships have already formed vis a vis this network, and two Montreal/Toronto engagements are imminant. There have already been several marriages between members from Montreal and Ottawa. "Long distance relationships are always more difficult, but if it is the right person the travelling becomes routine. As a bonus though, you can earn enough frequent flyer points to go on your honeymoon."

Even more exciting, are plans to expand the network to other cities. One of them currently underway is Israel. Recently a Toronto member flew to Israel for a visit and was easily connected with a member from Jerusalem. There has also been an Israeli member who flew to Montreal to meet with one of the members there. Now that's a long distance relationship!

Just as exciting, J.S.R. (MTL) is happy to welcome the former Jewish members of Michael Shaffers' Bringing Singles Together Inc. to it's service. In an announcement a few months ago, B.S.T. Inc. has transferred it's Jewish clientele to the Jewish Singles Registry and it's network of cities. Michael Shaffer is no longer serving the Jewish community through his introduction service. Former B.S.T. members can contact the J.S.R. Montreal office for more details at the phone number below.

Whether you are looking for a local or long distance relationship the Registry offers its members the easiest, most non-threatening way for Jewish singles to meet. Now is the perfect time to join and be a part of Canada's largest network of Jewish Singles. For more information or to become a member please call – in Montreal (514) 937-2049, in Toronto – (416) 398-7068, in Ottawa (613) 592-9797.

BYZAS: the newest jewel of the Danforth glitters and is gold

Every time a glitzy new restaurant opens in Toronto, there's a tendency to drag out the superlatives. It's the best-this, the best-that, the be-all and the end-all.

In the case of Byzas (pronounced "Bee-zass", short for "Byzantium"), the superlatives fall short. Simply put, it's altogether extraordinary and simply must be seen to be appreciated. It's one of those places where, for your first visit anyway, the food is almost an afterthought. That the eclectic Mediterranean menu more than lives up to its surroundings is the "icing" on an exceptional dining experience.

A few feet inside the door, you're greeted by a massive (6' x 10') terracotta mural designed by South African Jewish artist Lynn Fisher. A broad expanse of sandstone floor leisurely dotted with deep chestnut tables and flanked by a European-style bar segues into the main dining area, a gleaming expanse of honey-coloured hardwood trimmed in molasses brown. Sculptured okra walls vault up into vast arches fringed with hand-painted mosaics, which in turn slope hauntingly from one supportive orange column to the next. Booths and benches are richly upholstered in a striking Aztec motif. It may sound improbable, but it all works.

John Kekkas (who with his brother Dean owns Christina's, a favourite Danforth eatery) enjoys the design accolades, but will settle for the steady stream of happy customers who've come to be dazzled and dined. "We wanted to create something totally different here, not only from Christina's but from all other restaurants on the Danforth," says Kekkas.

The eclectic menu bears out his "vive la différence" campaign. You can't pigeonhole the cuisine, which cuts a swath through the Mediterranean, garnering the best elements from each country. Meat, fish, poultry, pizza and pasta dishes are all imaginatively prepared, uniquely seasoned, and stunningly presented. Finishing touches abound: edible flowers, imported herbs from France, organically grown greens, and a reverse osmosis filtration system to ensure absolute purity of the water. (A Toronto first, according to Kekkas).

More "icing", literally: in addition to its two master chefs, Byzas has an in-house pastry chef, so all desserts are prepared fresh on the premises. (Their tiramisu should be outlawed).

The restaurant seats up to 200 people and is ideal for special occasions. From Thursday to Sunday you'll be serenaded by a violinist, guitarist and accordianist; at other times the familiar strains of Fiddler on the Roof, Dr. Zhivago and other moving & soothing pieces can be heard on their state-of-the-art sound system. Open seven days a week (Sun.–Wed. 5 to 11 p.m. and Thurs.–Sat. 5 p.m. to 2 a.m.), Byzas will also be open for lunch starting in late January.

If you'd like to take a quick leave of absence from Toronto, Byzas will transport you into other-worldly delights at considerably less cost than a plane ticket.

Gourmet Kosher cuisine at Hyatt Regency Acapulco

Set in the best spot in the hotel, and right next to the pool, the kosher Restaurant in Hyatt Regency Acapulco has proven to be a great success among the members of the Jewish Community.

Opened on November 22nd., and supervised by Rabbi Antebi Meir, Member of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada, and Member of the Maguen David Community in Mexico City, Jewish guests are treated to the best in Kosher cuisine, featuring an array of dishes, inclusive of full dairy Breakfast Buffet, with a selection of Kosher cheeses, freshly sliced fruit and squeezed juices, waffle station, blintzes and more.

For lunch and dinner, a contemporary meat menu with sandwiches, salads, soups and light main courses such as Lamb Chops, Kafta Ground Beef Kebab Flavoured with Tehina Sauce and freshly caught Pacific Seafood are some of the delicacies offered for your enjoyment.

For Shabbat, a traditional dinner is offered on Friday nights, featuring specialities such as a selection of appetizers, with Red Snapper Ceviche, Smoked Trout, or Chicken consommé with Kneidlach. Main courses feature such items as Roast stuffed Half Chicken with pepper sauce or Prime Rib with natural juices, or Grilled Salmon Steak with Lemon.

On Saturdays, a special buffet for lunch with a full salad bar and a choice of main courses is served, such as Brisket of Beef with Mushroom sauce, or Cholent.

Food is served with the traditional Challah and with Kiddush Wine.

Of course, desserts can not be forgotten, and Apple Strudel and Pecan Pie are considered the favourites.

For your convenience, Prayer service is available on the premises daily.

Acapulco is what dreams are made of. And dreams come true at the Hyatt Regency Acapulco. The excitement begins on arrival. The marble lobby at the Hyatt Regency manages to be both spectacular and intimate, always full of people having a marvelous time.

Its 693 rooms in a landmark tower soar 23 stories above the golden sand that ring Acapulco Bay — the Hyatt Regency is grand and beautiful. Here the fun begins and goes on and on. Large, comfortable rooms, are adorned with the famous touches of Hyatt. They are nice to rest in, but both the pool and beach beckons you for a swim.

Poolside is definitely for relaxing, perhaps taking an occasional dip to paddle over to Bar Aquarius our swim-up bar. If that's too much effort, waiters are always available from Bar Capitan to rush drinks over to the thirsty in their lounge chairs.

The beach is the place to learn to waterski, sail, or to wander off and explore the bay in a tiny speed boat. The adventurous will want to try flying without jumping from a plane. In Acapulco it is called parasailing.

Guests are also protected from getting too much sun, by offering thatched beach umbrellas or palapas that dot the sand in front of the Hyatt Regency.

Its four restaurants, four bars, Tennis Club with five flood lit courts and water sport facilities, will make your stay in Acapulco even more pleasant.

Biotech firm for Winnipeg

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Apotex Inc., the largest Canadian-owned pharmaceutical manufacturing company will soon produce drugs such as insulin and human growth hormone made of natural human proteins.

Apotex president Barry Sherman said his company is in the final planning stage for a recombinant DNA facility in Winnipeg to produce such drugs.

"We're planning to make Apotex a world class biotechnology company by the year 2000," he said.

Apotex, which has the 20th highest research and development budget of any Canadian corporation, allocates $50 million a year — or 15 per cent of its annual sales in Canada — to research.

The money goes to private, non-profit and academic institutions for contract work such as drug testing, Sherman said.

Sherman, and Dr. Louis Siminovitch, C.C., Chairman Emeritus of the Samuel Lunenfeld Research Institute at Mount Sinai Hospital were panelists speaking on the relationship between business and science.

They spoke at the recent joint annual meeting of the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science and the Toronto Chapter.

Non-profit institutions like the Samuel Lunenfeld Institute at Baycrest have benefited from such arrangements.

Sherman said the relationship between business and academic institutions is complementary. "They (academia) give us (business) ideas for commercial exploitation. For academia we represent a route of commercialization and a source of funds."

According to Siminovitch, a medical geneticist, advances in technology have narrowed the gap between basic and applied science, thus changing the relationship between industry and academic institutions. Today, there is a growing partnership between the two that is mutually beneficial, he said.

Money from business for R&D helps fund labs, Siminovitch said, citing as an example, one of the Lunenfeld's Institute's business partnerships, its $2 million contract with Bristol-Myers Squibb Pharmaceutical Group.

Dr. Laurence A. Rubin, director of rheumatology at Woman's College Hospital, moderated the panel. He said that the usual avenues for obtaining research money are changing and consequently, scientists have to go where the money is (i.e. industry and adapt).

"That's a price potentially worth paying as long as you realize what it is," he said. "It might alter the original direction of your intellectual pursuits."

Tips from Pros

BY JEFF LEVINE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — This is the time of year many investors are considering what investments and tax options are available for the 1994 taxation year.

Revenue Canada, while rumoured to be considering modifications to the RRSP, has for the most part, since inception, left this investment vehicle structure intact. Prior to the federal government's forthcoming budget anticipated in late February, all of us should consider maximizing our contributions to such a plan.

An interesting 'qualified' investment for RRSP's centres around Israel Bonds. Investors can use Israel Bond certificates as part of their annual contribution, thereby receiving a tax deduction. In addition, it is an excellent conservative investment.

Let me expand upon this notion of 'contribution' and 'tax decution' by first giving you some background. Israel Bonds qualify as 'foreign content' in RRSP's. Investors can hold up to 20 per cent foreign content within such as plan. This figure is based on the "book value" which is the sum of all contributions and earnings made in the plan. The 20 per cent foreign content is always considered in Canadian Dollars.

To determine what your maximum contribution is for 1994, you must first establish what your earned income was in 1993. Your 1994 RRSP limit is equal to 18 per cent of 1993 earned income minus your pension adjustment to a maximum contribution of $13,500 for "early birds", your 1995 contribution is based on 18 per cent of 1994's income minus pension adjustment of a maximum $14,500.

For example (illustration purposes only).
Joe Shapiro - Investor has 1993 'earned income' of $75,000
(maximum contribution for 1994 - 18 per cent of $75,000 $13,500
Assume Joe Shapiro has original contribution of $7,500 in 1993. With his 1994 contribution of $13,500, and no other change in the 'book' value of his plan $7,500
Total Value $21,000
Foreign Content Limit (20 per cent of $21,000 Canadian Dollars) $4,200

If the investor elects to purchase the Zero Coupon Savings Bond, that individual has up to January 13, 1995, a purchase price of $2,975 U.S. (principal) or (in Canadian funds, assuming conversion U.S. to Canadian dollars @ 1.40 is within the 20 per cent guideline of foreign content. $4,165

Benefits:

a) Purchase of a Bond which earns interest tax-free, doubles in less than 9 years at a rate greater than 8 per cent;
b) Israel Bonds have a BBB+ investment grade
c) Israel Bonds have never defaulted or delayed on making interest payments nor repayment of principal;
d) Direct way of helping Israel
e) The investor who is eligible to contribute up to $13,500 uses a new Zero Coupon Savings bond Certificate as part of that contribution, in lieu of actual cash

For example:
Maximum allowable contribution (tax deduction) $13,500
A Zero Coupon Savings Bond Certificate (Cdn $ conversion) 4,165
Actual cash portion required $9,335

I have just used a Zero Coupon Savings Bond Certificate and the balance in cash, as part of my RRSP contribution. I receive a healthy tax deduction and investment!

If you are concerned about rising interest rates, consider the Canadian Floating Rate Issue Bond (C.F.R.I.). It is available in Canadian currency, although it is considered to be foreign content for RRSP's. Since it is denominated in Canadian Dollars, it is not subject to potential currency fluctuations. Minimum purchase is Cdn $5,000. With the Canadian Prime Rate rising of late, it appeals to many investors because of the variable feature. The C.F.R.I. also has early redemption privileges, providing liquidity at your option after three years within your plan.

Obviously, larger Bond denominations can be used within RRSP's if you have contributed over a number of years and have retained 'book value'. Many plans have such values in the $200,000 - $500,000 range. Up to 20 percent foreign content allows more flexibility.

A 40-year tradition closes its doors on Bathurst Street

By SYLVIA PAPERNICK
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — After over 40 years of providing quality kosher meats, Springer's Strictly Kosher Meat Market has closed its doors.

Brothers Charles and Henry Springer ran a quality shop, always with decency and a sense of humor, and their customers were loyal and appreciative.

The Springers established the store at 3393 Bathurst St. in 1953, after a few years of running Toronto Kosher Meat with their father at College and Euclid.

They have seen many changes in Bathurst Street from the time they first opened, not the least of which is how it has extended northward. This shift in the community is one of the reasons their business was slow lately. Many of their customers went "home for good," as Charles said.

Other factors which led them to the difficult decision to close up shop were explained by Henry: "The younger generation went to prepared food and the chain stores took over some of the business."

Springer's provided the freshest meat available and cut it to suit the needs of the individual customer, Henry says. "We bought the best, we didn't care if it cost a few cents more. If the customer's happy, we're happy."

Their customers were very happy. Many longtime customers echoed the same comments, that in all the years of buying meat from Springer's, they never got a bad piece of meat.

The Springer family, originally from a Polish town called Szczebreszyn, immigrated to Toronto in 1949 from a displaced persons camp in Austria where they had lived from 1946-1949.

Descendant of a long line of butchers, Charles, the elder brother trained in Europe. Here, the store's reputation was widespread and they had customers outside of Toronto. Meat was sent to Deep River, Ottawa, Kingston, and even Smooth Rock Falls, Ont. They also supplied Mt. Sinai Hospital.

They had a variety of customers over the years. Henry recalled the Jordanian Muslim family who came to them because they wanted to buy brain and the non-kosher method of slaughter prevents the meat from remaining untainted. When they realized the kosher method was different, they purchased their meat at Springer's and continued to return for more.

Upon learning Springer's was closing, longtime customers were regretful. They not only enjoyed Springer's meat they liked dealing with the brothers.

'The end of an age'

Anna Rosenfelder, a customer for over 30 years said she felt it was "the end of an age. They're really fine gentlemen, wonderful to deal with."

Frieda Torkin said, "It was a personal relationship as opposed to just walking in and helping myself." She said they went out of their way for their customers.

Having stocked up freezers with Springer's meat before the store finally closed, many customers are concerned about where they will go to find meat of comparable quality when that supply runs out. Charles and Henry are investigating the possibility of part-time work.

My mother, Leah Papernick, was a customer for almost 40 years. She is concerned she will not be able to match their quality of ground beef. They always went above and beyond regulated fat restrictions when grinding their beef.

I grew up on Springer's Meat, and used their meat when I set up my own kitchen. I can only agree that the closing of this shop is a loss to our community.

A last look at Springer's Strictly Kosher Meat Market.

Passover essay wins award

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Although she has suffered two severe strokes, is confined to a wheelchair and unable to speak, Basya Hunter recently received an award from the Canadian Church Press for her essay, Watchman — What of the Night?.

The award was presented at the annual Canadian Church Press conference in Mississauga. The Passover-themed essay was found "beautiful, wrenching, poetic and suspenseful" by the judges.

Watchmen is a chapter from Basya's unpublished memoirs. It appeared in Grail: An Ecumenical Journal, a quarterly journal published by the University of St. Jerome's College.

Basya, who has been a patient at the Baycrest Hospital for two years, is a drama teacher, actress and playwright . Her students include comedienne Barbara Hamilton, film director Ted Kotcheff, actors William Shatner and George Sperdakos, and singing star Robert Goulet.

Despite her frail condition, her sparkling green eyes reflect a world of knowledge and enthusiasm. Discussing her many accomplishments through written notes, she points to Johannes Reuchlin and the Talmud, which played at the Tarragon Theatre, St. Michael's College School and the Leah Posluns Theatre, as one of her greatest achievements.

As well, she takes joy in the Basya Hunter Play Development Fund, established by her family in 1988 to encourage new plays of Jewish significance.

Hunter was born in Minsk just before the outbreak of World War I. She grew up on the Lower East Side of New York and attended East Broadway Hebrew School for Girls. At 15, she dropped out of public school and became a Hebrew teacher.

To escape her impoverished childhood, she began writing and acting in playlets with her friends. On her way to study theatre in Moscow in 1935 she met Peter Hunter. They were married the following year.

Eye on Arts

By Bill Gladstone

Jewish Film Foundation: After receiving a registered charitable tax number in November, Toronto Jewish Film Festival president Helen Zukerman and festival director Debra Plotkin announced the formation of the only Jewish film foundation in Canada.

With this new status, the foundation may accept tax receiptable donations for its various projects. Foremost among these is the annual Jewish Film Festival, a highly popular event which this year runs May 4 to 11. Another is the roster of courses in Jewish film being offered at the Bloor JCC and York University, beginning this month.

The foundation has ambitious plans that include establishing a fund for emerging Jewish film and video makers and another fund for the restoration of historical Jewish film footage, and encouraging the production of Jewish-content films for children. TJFF, 33 Prince Arthur Ave., Second Floor, Toronto, Ont. M5R 1B2. 416-324-8226.

Crowds line up at Toronto's Jewish Film Festival.

Children's Arts Festival: Beginning this month, the Satok School of the Arts boasts weekly workshops for children in painting, batik and sculpture designed around the theme of the Wild Animal Kingdom. The school, founded by blind, internationally renowned artist Ron Satok, is known for encouraging people with unique needs to express themselves through dance, painting, sculpture, story-telling and drama.

In part, the school is hosting the workshops to develop a committed core group of children age 8 to 16 to participate in a proposed Toronto Children's Art Featival to take place August 26 to 30. According to a news release, festival orgzanizers "believe that parents and educators need to be aware of the importance of children finding a language in the arts which they can call their own."

For information, call Ron or Susan Satok 416-967-0780

Members of the Toronto Children's Arts Festival's advisory board include Ginger Eisen, president of Ginger's Bathrooms, and Jeanne Beker of CITY-TV's Fashion Television. Larry Sax of Sax Isaacs, Barristers, and Roslyn Levy, president of the Toronto Optimist Club, sit on the board of directors.

Livent vs. Province of Ontario: in late December, Livent Inc. of Toronto filed a lawsuit against the Ontario government, seeking $20 million in damages, on the basis that the province's Anti-Racist Secretariat funneled about $200,000 to political action groups committed to scuttling Livent's production of Show Boat.

The company claims that continuous false public claims against the musical, which is now playing on Broadway as well as in North York, resulted in cancelled school trips and ticket sales not reaching levels they otherwise would have attained. In February 1993 — nearly two years after Livent announced its intention to mount the production — members of a group called the Coalition to Stop Show Boat began to protest, complaining to official government bodies and in public demonstrations that the production was racist, derogatory of persons of African descent, and amounted to "hate literature."

Livent's lawsuit challenges the Anti-Racist Secretariat's "wrongful and arbitrary use of authority" and claims there is no statutory or regulatory basis whatsoever for the existence of the Anti-Racism Secretariat or for the government practice of funding certain groups to "criticize, discourage, suppress or prohibit specific forms of expression" which they may deem as "racist." This, according to the statement of claim, is "an arbitrarty and indefensible violation of the fundamental right of freedom of expression" as guaranteed by the charter.

Livent is claiming general damages of $10 million and an additional $10 million in punitive and exemplary damages. The company also claims $500,000 in additional legal, advertising and administrative expenses as a result of the actions of the government.

For Livent CEO Garth Drabinsky, the lawsuit adds further drama to a life in which, it seems, there is hardly a dull moment. It's clear that Drabinsky will have to start thinking about writing a sequel once the publishing house McClelland & Stewart releases his autobiography Closer To The Sun at the end of March.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

As coffee-table books go, A Day in the Life of Israel (HarperCollins, $63) is beyond reproach.

An intelligent compilation of photographic impressions of the Jewish state, this is an album that one treasures and keeps coming back to long after the initial perusal.

A Day in the Life of Israel contains some 200 color and black-and-white photos. They were culled from nearly 100,000 shot by 60 top-flight photojournalists on May 5, 1993, a day after Israel and the PLO ratified their peace accord in Cairo.

The photographs, supplemented by concise captions, reveal Israel in all its facets and moods.

I was particularly struck by a handful — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin reading his morning newspaper over breakfast; prepubescent yeshivah students struggling to remain alert after a long day; an Arab horsebreeder putting his steed through its paces; an armed West Bank settler shopping with his 2-year-old daughter.

I also liked the panoramic vistas of Netanya from the sea and of boxy Tel Aviv; the Bedouin shepherdess in her flowing robes; the tourists baking under a crust of Dead Sea mud; the wary Israeli soldiers on patrol; the Druze circumcision ceremony; the Ethiopian mother in repose at a caravan site; the asphalt road snaking up the awesome Mitspe Ramon crater in the Negev.

A Day in the Life of Israel succeeds in distilling Israel's photogenic essence. The editors are to be congratulated on a job well done.

Storytelling & Spirituality in Judaism by Yitzhak Buxbaum Jason Aronson Inc. (paperbound)

When the founder of chassidic Judaism, the great Israel Baal Shem Tov, saw misfortune threatening the Jews, it was his custom to go into a certain part of the forest to meditate. There he would light a fire, say a special prayer, and the miracle would be accomplished and the misfortune averted.

Later, when his disciple, the celebrated Maggid of Mezritch, had occasion to intercede with heaven, he would go to the same place in the forest and say: "Master of the Universe, listen! I do not know how to light the fire, but I am still able to say the prayer," and again the miracle would be accomplished.

Still later, Rabbi Moshe-leib of Sasov, in order to save his people once more, would go into the forest and say, "I do not know how to light the fire. I do not know the prayer, but I know the place and this must be sufficient." It was sufficient, and the miracle was accomplished.

Then it fell to Rabbi Israel of Rizhin to overcome misfortune. Sitting in his armchair, his head in his hands, he spoke to God: "I am unable to light the fire, and I do not know the prayer, and I cannot even find the place in the forest. All I can do is to tell the story, and this must be sufficient." And it was sufficient.

If God responds to stories, then storytelling must be as much a mitzvah as Torah study or prayer. Through the skilful use of metaphor and image, stories invite a kind of vision that gives shape and form to the invisible. Of all the means open to us, stories are among the surest ways of touching the human spirit.

In recent years there has been a revival of Jewish storytelling in North America and the book under review is the first and only work on the subject. The author increases our appreciation of how chassidic tales can awaken the religious spirit and how even the average person can become a valuable storyteller.

It is no surprise that some religious teachers have tended to discount the narrative portions of the tradition in favor of the legal parts. Aggadah (stories, parables etc.) has often been considered inferior to Halachah (law and commandments). The author regards this attitude as both narrow and self-defeating because it distances many Jews from the love and the knowledge of Torah. He asks, "How could the Baal Shem Tov bring the light of the Torah to others if he sat day and night in the study hall?" So he travelled constantly to return Jews to God through his own ingenious methods — lords and peasants, merchants and shepherds, mystics and common thieves.

Do religious stories have to be true? Do they have to conform to facts or reality? Eli Wiesel, a master storyteller himself, answers in the negative. The first tale he heard from his grandfather contained events and dates that didn't match. "I surely didn't care. What mattered to me was not that two and two are four, but that God is one. Better still: that man and God are one." Evidently an objective Chassid is not a Chassid.

Stories have the power to enter the hearts of serious listeners. Once Rabbi Israel of Rizhin visited the homes of 17 of the town's prominent citizens and told each of them a story. Later each one of them came to the rebbe in his home and confessed his sins, having realized that his evil deeds were hinted at in the story he was told.

In summary, the author writes: "Holy stories are the light of the world. When we understand that, when both tellers and listeners know they are engaged in sacred activity, we will hold stories and storytelling more dear. The teller will tell with the tongue of faith, the listeners will hear with ears of faith, and the circle of holiness will be closed."

Luxury lodgings in Germany

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

FRANKFURT, Germany — I knew I was in good hands when I checked into the Forte Grand Park hotel here recently.

Part of a world-wide chain, with branches in Canada and the Middle East, it is widely regarded as a first-class hostelry with the finest amenities.

And it seems that the Israeli government shares this view.

After Israel and Jordan established formal diplomatic relations, Israeli officials scoured Amman for a suitable embassy building. Not able to find one at such short notice, Israel set up a temporary embassy at the Forte Grand Hotel in Amman, situated right in the heart of Amman's business district.

Five-star rating is richly deserved

Having luxuriated in Frankfurt's Forte Grand Parkhotel for two nights, I perfectly understand why the Israelis settled for its sister hotel in Jordan.

Literally minutes by foot away from Frankfurt's main railroad station, the Forte Grand Parkhotel is centrally located.

It is close to the Zeil, the busiest shopping area in Germany; the Goethe House, the birthplace of Germany's most famous poet; the Jewish Museum, which is currently staging an exhibit on the Rothschild family; and the Romerberg, the historic focal point of this Americanized city on the Main River.

More to the point, the Forte Grand Parkhotel boasts a five-star rating, which is richly deserved. This is a hostelry which exudes understated elegance and tradition.

Formerly known as the Movenpick Parkhotel, it was built in 1905, only to be destroyed by Allied bombing raids during World War II.

With careful attention to detail, the hotel was rebuilt to pre-war specifications and standards. A new, more modern section was added in the 1960s.

With 269 well-appointed rooms, the Forte Grand Parkhotel offers guests such amenities as color television sets, direct-dial telephones and air conditioning. The rooms have wall-to-wall carpeting, while the bathrooms are furnished with stainless steel fittings and marble floors.

The Forte Grand Hotel is a class act.

Vanderbilt mansion a feast for the eyes

By PHYLLIS KRASILOVSKY
Special to The CJN

Visiting the sights of Asheville, N.C., is like taking a trip back to Victorian times.

One of the foremost of the city's century-old buildings is the Biltmore estate, North America's largest private residence (on Highway 25, north of exit 50).

George Vanderbilt's 255-room mansion, completed in 1895, was modeled on the Loire Valley chateaux of the 16th century. Tremendous rooms, many ballroom-sized, are furnished with carefully maintained antiques and decorated with brocade, gilt and superb arrangements of fresh flowers. The bed chambers could easily qualify for five-star hotel ratings.

In the basement is a huge tiled pool and an exercise room, as well as the kitchen and pantries and the quarters that housed the servants.

Some of the many art works (purportedly 50,000) include antique furniture inlaid with beautiful wood, as well as paintings by artists such as Pierre Auguste Renoir and portraits by famous American painter James Whistler, who was an occasional guest at the mansion.

A three-mile avenue of trees leads to the 8,000-acre Biltmore house gardens, which visitors can drive through. The formal and informal gardens were designed by landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead just after he completed New York's Central Park.

On the property there is a winery (North Carolina is rated 10th in U.S. wine production) where guests can enjoy generous samples of four distinctly different wines.

Asheville's Folk Art Centre, famous for its local crafts, features the creations of regional artists, sculptures from native woods and red clay, as well as fine weaving and glass sculptures.

Travel Talk

By Bill Gladstone

Four seasons Hotel, London: Twenty-five years after she attended the hotel's opening ceremonies, Britain's Princess Alexandra is set to help London's posh Four Seasons Hotel celebrate its 25th anniversary Jan. 30, by being guest of honor at a gala birthday (tickets $275) in aid of the British Red Cross Society. Isadore Sharp, Toronto-based chair and president of the Four Seasons Regent worldwide chain of luxury hotels, plans to be on hand to greet the princess, as he was 25 years ago.

To commemorate the anniversary, the Four Seasons London (previously known as the Inn on the Park) is offering a romantic weekend package for those marrying in 1995 and those who married in 1970. Its Silver Nights package includes a chauffeur-driven limousine from Heathrow Airport, suite accommodation, a candlelight dinner, a champagne breakfast in bed and other amenities.

Throughout 1995, the deluxe Mayfair-area hotel is serving a special anniversary blend of tea, devised by British tea magnate Sam Twining, daily in its lounge. The afternoon anniversary tea service costs $33.

Passover Getaway: Just because Moses and the children of Israel left Egypt with hardly a moment's notice is no reason to wait to the last minute before deciding where you should go for a Passover vacation this year. Herewith, the first in a series of classy Pesach destinations that Travel Talk is planning to feature in coming weeks.

Toronto's Isadore Sharp (left) looks on as Britain's Princess Alexandra is greeted by Eugene Wagner at the opening of the Four Seasons Hotel, London in 1970.

Situated on a two-mile stretch of spectacular Pacific Ocean coastline between Los Angeles and San Diego, the Ritz-Carlton Laguna Niguel resort offers a Glatt kosher, Cholov Yisroel program (under the supervision of the Va'ad HaRabonim of San Diego) that includes two extravagant seders, three lavish gourmet meals and tea service daily, all prepared by outstanding international chefs. If you can move after all the wonderful food you'll be served, the resort offers oceanside golf, tennis and a spa fitness centre. Synagogue services and daily shiurim are planned for the holiday.

Easily accessible to Disneyland, the San Diego Zoo, Sea World, Universal Studios and other top attractions, the Ritz-Carlton Laguna Niguel was recently rated as the best resort in the United States and the fifth best in the world by the prestigious Conde Nast Travel survey. To make Passover reservations at this five-star and five-diamond Pacific palace, call Jeanne Litvin or Mel Teitelbaum, 213-655-9594.

Eighteenth century shul unscathed from disaster

An external shot of the Bevis Marks Synagogue.

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

LONDON — Built in 1701, London's well-known Bevis Marks Synagogue is one of few buildings in this east-end neighbourhood to emerge unscathed from the Nazi bombing of World War II and the many questionable urban renewal projects that followed the war's devastation.

Twice rattled in recent years by IRA bombs intended for nearby targets, the elegant brown brick building still stands proudly in its tiny protective courtyard. The architectural elegance of this synagogue, the oldest in Great Britain, reflects the glory its Sephardi congregants felt at living in a country where they were able to pray freely as Jews.

Inside the shul, which is used for ceremonial occasions, the wooden pews, brass candelabras and elaborate Torah ark are remarkably well-preserved. Near the front, a special chair is still chained off in honor of the synagogue's most celebrated congregant, Sir Moses Montefiore (1784-1885), who is accorded the status of a latter-day Eliyahu.

Another famous congregant was Isaac D'Israeli (1766-1848), author of numerous volumes of literary history and anecdotes, and father of the British statesman Benjamin Disraeli. Records indicate that, owing to some breach of synagogue rules (possibly non-attendance at services), D'Israeli was ordered to pay a fine. He adamantly refused. Consequently, not only did his son never have a bar-mitzvah, but his father took him to a church to be baptised.

Situated within walking distance of both the Aldgate and the Liverpool Street underground stations, Bevis Marks is not normally open to the public. A good way to see the synagogue is by going on a walking tour of the Jewish East End.

One recommended walk is offered by Historical Tours (081-668-4019), with John Muffty as guide. It starts most Sundays and Tuesdays at 11 a.m., takes two hours to complete, and costs about $10. A synagogue attendant requests an additional $2 donation.

England expelled its Jews in 1290, long before either Spain or Portugal. Bevis Marks, which replaced a smaller Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, was erected less than half a century after the Jews were officially readmitted in 1656. A plaque marks the site of the earlier Sephardi synagogue, in Creechurch Lane.

The feeling of civic pride and gratitude that informed the construction of Bevis Marks is reflected in the hallmark Great Synagogue of Amsterdam, which the local Sephardi community built in 1675. In the 1700s, Sephardi communities erected similar grand structures in Curacao, Rhode Island and numerous other localities in America and the Caribbean.

330 OBITUARIES

STREN Maurie, at the Hamilton General Hospital on Monday, January 2, 1995 in his 84th year; beloved husband of Sadie; dear father of David Patti and her husband, Richard; brother of Lena Rothberg and her husband, Murray, and Sarah Stren; brother-in-law of Miriam Stren, who was the wife of his brother Jack, who predeceased him. He is also survived by six nieces and nephews. Mr. Stren was a graduate of the University of Toronto School of Engineering. He and his brother founded the Texpack Company. He served as a Lieutenant in the Second World War in the Canadian Electrical and Mechanical Engineering Corps. He was active in service organizations, The "Y's" Mens Club, B'nai Brith and the Lions Club, in which he was elected Deputy District Governor. He served also in the activities of the Beth David Synagogue. Funeral services were held on Wednesday, January 4, 1995 at the BECKETT-GLAVES FAMILY FUNERAL CENTRE, 88 Brant Avenue, Brantford at 3:30 p.m. Interment Beth David Cemetery. Shiva at 288 Dufferin Avenue, Brantford, Ontario. We deeply appreciate the care and compassion of the Doctors and staff of Hamilton St. Joseph's Hospital.
A Memorial Tree will be planted for Maurie in the Beckett Glaves Memorial Forest.

Cost no factor in war crimes cases: Marchi

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Citizenship and Immigration Canada appears to be backtracking on statements made to the president of Canadian Jewish Congress, indicating that the department considered legal action against Nazi war criminals too expensive.

Last week, Citizenship and Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi stated cost will not be a factor in determining whether legal action will be taken.

Congress president Irving Abella had been quoted in media reports as saying that Marchi had earlier told him the department was under financial siege and cutbacks had been ordered.

Abella told The CJN "I'm sure he's been told by his bureaucrats that there is no money" to prosecute suspected war criminals. "I fear it's another excuse to not do anything."

Immigration Department spokesperson Roger White attempted to scotch that perception, saying the department will announce its planned course of action in connection with suspected Nazi war criminals in the first week of February.

White said that since last summer, the immigration and the justice departments have cooperated on eight files developed by the Justice Department's war crimes unit.

"It's very much a front-burner issue with this department," he said. "Cost will not be a deciding factor. Our legal and moral obligations will be the major criteria."

CJN reporter meets with Arafat

Staff writer Sheldon Kirshner visited the Gaza Strip recently and met with PLO chairman Yasser Arafat. Here are his impressions of his visit.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

GAZA CITY — There he was, a small, unprepossessing, unshaven, gimlet-eyed man wearing his trademark black-and white kaffiyeh and pale green military-style uniform. Looking exactly as he does in photographs and on television, Yasser Arafat greeted us with a warm smile and an outstretched hand.

I shook his hand, he muttered a welcome, and I withdrew, taking my place behind a long conference table in Arafat's office in Gaza City. For years, I had written and read about the PLO leader. Now, for the first time, I had met him in the flesh.

For the next hour or so, Arafat spoke extemporaneously, fielded questions, posed for pictures and answered personal queries.

I had intended to go to Gaza, the Bangladesh of the Middle East. And when I heard that an Americans for Peace Now delegation fresh from a trip to Jordan and Syria had been invited to Arafat's headquarters in Gaza City, I decided to accompany the group.

With the King David Hotel in Jerusalem as the departure point, we were driven to the Erez crossing point, the bustling gateway to Gaza. There we were met by Sofian Abu Zaida of the Israeli Affair's Department of the Palestine National Authority's Ministry of Planning and International Cooperation.

The nine of us got off the minibus, walked to the border, showed our passports to an Israeli soldier and piled into three cars with Gaza licence plates. A Palestinian policeman riding a motorcycle with the siren on led the way, scattering wayward cars, trucks and donkey carts. Palestinians on the side of the road stared, probably wondering whether we were VIPs.

We passed citrus orchards, scraggly fields and isolated farmsteads before we reached Gaza City, a grey, depressing vista of crumbling buildings and a jumble of majestic minarets piercing the skyline.

Within minutes, we reached a partially-finished, dilapidated concrete structure on the Mediterranean Sea near Gaza City's port, a building Arafat shares with the Palestine Broadcasting Authority.

As we stepped out, a horde of photographers and TV cameramen descended upon us. Armed guards — hard, mustachioed men cradling guns and rifles and clad in boots and sneakers — escorted us into awaiting room. The security was surprisingly lax. No one even frisked us.

Arafat is notorious for keeping guests cooling their heels for hours, but we were ushered into his presence in about 10 minutes.

Arafat's office was spacious. It was adorned with a black-enameled table with chairs, a brown credenza, a Philips TV set, a Palestinian flag resting against white curtains, an aerial map of Jerusalem and framed color photographs of the Dome of the Rock and of Arafat with two unidentified associates.

CANADA

BBC Leaders in China

TORONTO — Leaders of B'nai Brith Canada last week left for what is described as an unprecedented trip to China.

The delegation is to forge links with the ancient Chinese Jewish community and promote positive ties with Beijing.

Joining the trip is Ontario Liberal MPP Monte Kwinter.

As part of the mission, BBC will examine whether any of the current anti-Semitism in Asia has found its way to China.

CCRJ Trip to Israel

TORONTO — The outreach department of the Canadian Council for Reform Judaism is presenting Israel Through Jewish Eyes, a trip to the Holy Land from March 12-23, 1995.

The trip will be led by CCRJ director Rabbi Daniel Gottlieb and outeach coordinator Jessie Caryll.

It will include touring of the major attractions in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, the Golan Heights, Haifa and other centres. Cost is $2,350 per person.

For details, call (905) 709-2275.

Heritage Front Hotline

ST. CATHARINES — The white supremacist Heritage Front has announced it intends to launch a telephone hotline in this southern Ontario city to recruit members and spread its message.

A similar hotline in Toronto was subject of complaints to the Canadian Human Rights Commission over messages that denigrated minorities.

Bill Livingstone, a spokesman for the Niagara branch of the Heritage Front, said the messages will be less controversial than those in Toronto.

However, Jim Millington, spokesman for the Niagara Region Race Relations Council, said the group will monitor the hotline and take legal action if its messages are offensive.

ISRAEL

Rabbi Riskin Apologizes

EFRAT — Rabbi Shlomo Riskin of the West Bank settlement of Efrat last week apologized for having called on American Jews not to donate to the United Jewish Appeal and instead channel money directly to Jewish settlements in the territories.

"I don't believe that we shouldn't give to UJA. If it came out that way, then I'm sorry," he said.

Rabbi Riskin added that his own Ohr Torah Educational Institutions in Jerusalem are beneficiaries of UJA funds.

At the same time, however, he repeated his view that American Jews should give directly to projects in the territories.

Russians 'Stigmatized'

JERUSALEM — There is no Russian mafia in Israel, but Russian newcomers are often stigmatized as criminals.

That's the main conclusion of the Knesset Aliya and Absorption Committee, which met last week to discuss media reports on organized crime, prostitution, and drug rings run by immigrants.

The number of Russian immigrants with criminal records "is probably only in the hundreds and not proportionately different from any other ethnic group of immigrants," said a police spokesman.

WORLD

Aid to Continue

WASHINGTON — Washington's top Republicans have assured Jewish leaders that the party intends to maintain aid to Israel at its current level.

New House Speaker Newt Gingrich, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole and Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott delivered the message in separate meetings last week with leaders of the National Jewish Coalition, a group that supports Republican causes.

Israel annually receives $1.8 billion in defence aid and $1.2 billion in economic assistance. President Bill Clinton told Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin when they met here in November that the aid was safe at least through the end of the 1995 fiscal year.

Czechs Want Reparations

BONN — Victims of Nazi atrocities in the Czech Republic are demanding Germany grant them reparations for suffering during World War II.

But at the same time, representatives of the 3 million Germans who fled from the Sudentenland during the war demanded that the Czech government compensate them for their suffering. Many also demand to be repatriated.

Jacob Cermin, who reprsents the 16,800 survivors of Nazi persecution still living in the Czech Republic, warned recently that Germany's failure to compensate the Czechs could lead to "renewed hatred between the two peoples."

The Sarajevo Hagaddah

CHICAGO — Israel is negotiating to save the renowned Sarajevo Hagaddah, the Chicago Tribune reported recently.

The priceless volume, which dates to about 1350 CE, is kept in a vault of the embattled city's central bank. It has become, the paper says, a "hostage" of the fighting in Bosnia.

Other parties, including the auction house Sotheby's, are also said to have an interest in the hagaddah.

An offer of $1 million in cash plus weapons and fuel, in exchange for the hagaddah, was turned down by Bosnian officials, the paper reported.

Bukharan Jew 'Framed'

NEW YORK — The U.S.-based Union of Councils for Soviet Jews is charging that a 76-year-old Bukharan Jew has been framed for murder in Uzbekistan.

The advocacy organization charges that the trial of Iosif Koinov is part of an increasing climate of anti-Semitism in the former Soviet republic.

Koinov, an observant Jew, is accused of killing a 17-year-old tenant in his building, who was found murdered in bed on Sept. 29.

According to the Union of Councils, Koinov was in fact traveling at the time the murder occurred, and no traces of the victim's blood were found on the knife he allegedly used.

After being tortured by authorities, Koinov reportedly signed a false confession.

The trial began on Jan. 5, but was immediately adjourned, for reasons not reported.

Joe Slovo Dies

JOHANNESBURG — South African President Nelson Mandela declared last Sunday a day of national mourning for Housing Minister Joe Slovo, who died of cancer Jan. 5 at the age of 68.

Born Yossel Mashal Slovo in Obelei, Lithuania, Slovo was a longtime communist who devoted his life to the fight for full racial equality in South Africa.

He was the first white to be elected to the executive of the African National Congress and was one of two Jews to serve in cabinet after Mandela won the country's first all-race elections last April.

Medical Ethics Conference

SAN FRANCISCO — Physicians and nurses are invited to attend the sixth annual International Conference on Jewish Medical Ethics, to take place here Feb. 17-20.

Areas to be explored include Halachic views on such issues as fetal tissue experimentation, informed consent, autopsies and organ transplants, among others.

Speakers will include Lord Immanuel Jakobovits, former Chief Rabbi of the British Commonwealth, and Rabbi Moshe Tendler of Yeshiva University.

For details, call 1-800-258-4427.

BB may fight entry of anti-abortion activist

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — A B'nai Brith (BB) official says his organization may try to keep American anti-abortion activist Randall Terry out of Canada when a conference of 1,200 pro-lifers meets here April 19 to 23.

Terry, a leader of a U.S. anti-abortion group called Operation Rescue, was convicted of criminal contempt in a New York court in June 1993, said Stephen Scheinberg, past national chair of BB's League for Human Rights.

Terry is scheduled to deliver a keynote speech on April 22, at a conference of Human Life International (HLI), which claims to have branches in over 50 countries.

HLI leader denounced

HLI leader, Father Paul Marx, has been denounced by BB and by Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) for his past record of singling out Jews in the pro-choice movement.

Scheinberg said BB will have to see if they have enough to justify trying to keep Terry from entering the country.

"If we have enough, we will go ahead with it," he said.

HLI officials have reacted to the protests of Jewish groups by accusing BB and pro-choice groups such as Planned Parenthood of conducting a smear campaign.

Romalis speaks out

By ARIELA FRIEDMAN
Special to The CJN

VANCOUVER — Dr. Gary Romalis wants everyone in the Jewish community to know that he is "absolutely overwhelmed" by the outpouring of support and concern for his well-being.

From Vancouver General Hospital, where he is still recovering from a gunshot wound that caused extensive damage to his leg, Romalis agreed to a recent telephone interview with the Jewish Western Bulletin.

Speaking calmly about the Nov. 8 shooting — his voice trembling with emotion only when reflecting on his family's and the community's support — the Jewish gynecologist, shot by an unknown assailant, said he is astounded by the backing he has received.

"I've been overwhelmed by the support from the Jewish community. People have been wonderful. There's no way to Separate Quebec would use French to unite groups: BQ

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Just as Israel used Hebrew as a common language to "cement" immigrants together, a separate Quebec will use French to do the same thing, Bloc Quebecois (BQ) whip Gilles Duceppe told delegates to the recent Jewish Students' Network convention.

Speaking in English, Duceppe praised the contribution of the Jewish community in shaping the history of the province. He sought to reassure the crowd that any person who lives in Quebec is a Quebecer.

Anglophones and cultural communities, he pledged, will have their "collective rights" fully recognized under sovereignty, including education, health and social services and cultural institutions.

But Duceppe also made a distinction between Quebec having a "multicultural" society, which he opposed, and a "pluricultural" one, which he supported.

The former, he said, risks building walls between communities and "ghettoizing" them.

The latter, by contrast, allows for cultural groups to maintain their roots but to be cemented together by a common language, he said.

Duceppe believes that the referendum on Quebec sovereignty will pass later this year.

He characterized secession as a process that will permit Quebec to control taxation, pass laws and sign international treaties.

He claimed sovereignty would be good not only for Quebec, but for Canada too, since the issue will finally be settled and each will be able to go its own way.

He also was confident Quebec could sign on to the North American free trade deal (NAFTA), "but you have to exist [as a country] first."

Fielding questions later, Duceppe said Quebec's working language "is, should be, and will [continue to be] French." Immigrants from outside Quebec who wish to send their children to public schools will have to send them to French schools, just as immigrants to France do.

Duceppe said Quebecers will also be able to keep "dual citizenship," and continue to use the Canadian dollar.

If the Quebec government loses the referendum, Duceppe said the BQ will have to "consider the reality and analyse the the situation," but he did not say whether BQ MPs would resign their seats.

Duceppe also said that as long as Quebec schools are divided along religious lines, Muslim girls should have the right to wear the religious scarf called the hijab.

But the right to wear the hijab — and even the Jewish kipah — would have to be debated if schools become language-based only, Duceppe said.

"We should not have religion in [language-based] public schools," he said.

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer Fred M. Catzman has been researching their origins over the past few years. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

FORGANG

Frances Halpern writes that her maiden name was Forgang, but does not know its meaning or origin. My interpretation will make her proud.

Forgang has several meanings, but the probable definition is model. A Forganger is a leader or precedent. Frances can boast of ancestors that were model parents and grandparents and by their exemplary character were recognized as communal leaders.

PIPIK

A correspondent who requested that his adopted surname should not be disclosed enquires about the origin of his father's surname — Pipik.

There are two possible sources for the name.

It is the Yiddish word for navel and it was adopted as a nickname for a small-sized and corpulent person.

The other possibility is that it is derived from the Village of Pupiki, but a name that owes its origin to this eminent village would be surnamed Pupik rather than Pipik.

Play for Jay tournament raises $15,000

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — More than 320 basketball players of all sizes and abilities turned up recently at the Play for Jay three-on-three basketball tournament at the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC).

They dribbled, dunked and passed the day away, all for a good cause. Together they helped raise about $15,000 for the Friends of Jay Feinberg Foundation. The money will help finance blood donor clinics for those stricken with leukemia.

Feinberg, who was diagnosed almost four years ago with the life-threatening disease, was too ill to attend.

Audey Stanleigh, who indirectly owes his life to Feinberg, helped organize the day-long event. Stanleigh, 19, received a bone-marrow transplant last July from a donor who was tested at a clinic organized by Feinberg's family to find a suitable donor for their son.

"The whole idea of healing through sports appealed to us," said Stanleigh, who with friend Ilan Meister, 19, conceived of the basketball fundraiser.

The BJC co-sponsored the event.

Out on the court in the BJC's main gym, dozens of spectators and friends buzzed around as athletes showed their wares. One highlight was a celebrity game between TSN, The Sports Network, and The Fan all-sports radio station.

Elsewhere, emotions ran high in what looked to be a grudge match as a group of high school girls took on a team of teachers. Spectators wondered, which would prevail, experience or youth, exuberance or savvy?

In the end, the 30-something teachers, who dubbed themselves "The Educators," humbled the youngsters and gloated all the way to their next match.

"We beat up on 'em good," said teacher Bonnie Chusid, obviously not a grammer instructor.

"We've still got it," said Daryl Starkman, savoring the thrill of victory. Sisters-in-law Shari Weinberg and Tina Weinberg voiced the feeling of many when they said "it's good fun for a good cause."

Altogether, 82 teams anted up $100 each to participate in the fundraiser. Additional sums were collected from donations, the sale of merchandise and admission fees.

The Certificate of Participation and Other Good Deeds

Every year, high school and college students by the hundreds are presented with a hand-lettered Certificate of Participation for completing an educational day—including a tour—at Benjamin's. Their comments positively affirm our belief in the importance of teaching this area of Jewish life. We also speak continuously to community groups, and lecture in schools on the religious, psychological and social context of our work.

Education, professional leadership and Tzedaka affirm Benjamin's role as a community resource. These are natural extensions of our everyday activities, fulfilling needs for Jewish dialogue, supporting innovations that better serve families, and providing support at the personal and professional level.

We are proud that today's students who come to learn about the mitzvot performed from the moment we are called, are the fifth generation to benefit from Benjamin's dedication to community service.

Hamilton JCC hopes to put financial setbacks behind

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — The Jewish Community Centre (JCC) of Hamilton-Wentworth and area is looking to put financial setbacks behind it in 1995 and increase membership and programming.

"We've had a tough year, but we're going to make it," promised newly installed president Harvey Waxman at the JCC's recent annual general meeting.

Waxman, who served as JCC president for two years in the mid-80s, said federation has agreed to support the twin goals of increased membership and programming in an agreement "to help us get things going again," Waxman said.

Late last summer, mounting concern over the JCC's financial problems caused federation to step in with what outgoing president David Loewith termed "a wake-up call."

The JCC's financial problems are in large part due to non-payment of pledges made to the capital building fund when the JCC moved to its present location on the western outskirts of Hamilton in 1987, and to insufficient income from memberships.

According to financial statements presented by accountant Larry Matlow of Vine and Partners of Kitchener, there has been a small increase in JCC membership over the past year.

Other JCC woes are the failure to obtain the zoning changes necessary to remodel its 34-acre property and convert the former racquet club on the site for institutional use.

Ongoing zoning negotiations have been stalled because of opposition by neighbors, but vice-president Larry Szpirglas reported that the Niagara Escarpment Commission has approved the concept of a pool, one baseball diamond and possibly one other "multi-activity play area."

The JCC is planning to turn a former farmhouse at the western end of the property into an administrative building for the day camp.

Szpirglas said he hopes that Ancaster town council, under whose jurisdiction the JCC falls, will now approve the JCC's revised recreational master plan and "that everything will be completed by June."

The JCC will also continue its efforts to obtain an extension of the present bus route to the JCC property.

Past president Michael Kemeny installed the new board, which includes Susan Gilbert as treasurer and Howie Brown and former president Sandy Silver as directors-at-large.

Jewish emigres top conference's agenda

MONTREAL — Jewish community professionals from across the country met recently to plan ways to help new immigrants find jobs in Canada.

Thirty community workers from Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Ottawa, Windsor, Toronto and Montreal met in November to coordinate vocational services for Jewish immigrants from the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

Susan Davis

"The Jewish emigres served collectively by these Jewish communities have a tremendous potential to become some of Canada's leading professionals in engineering, science and business," said Susan Davis, national executive director of Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS) Canada.

Conference participants agreed to work towards a national Jewish vocational network and to pursue federal funding. "Such a network would make it possible for smaller communities to benefit from successful program models and services of the Montreal and Toronto JVS (Jewish Vocational Services) agencies," said Montreal JVS director David Mendelson.

The Montreal conference was co-sponsored by JIAS and the JVS agencies of Toronto and Montreal, two of the 26 JVS agencies throughout North America.

HEBREW BASIC BURIAL

Beginning January 1995, Jewish families will be able to arrange economical yet dignified interment through HEBREW BASIC BURIAL. Traditional Halachic standards are strictly observed. This new alternative caters to families who are comfortable with a traditional graveside service and a more involved role in order to reduce expenses.

HEBREW BASIC BURIAL is the only all-Jewish facility in Metropolitan Toronto which provides this adherence to Halacha and attention to detail at exceptionally low cost.

Anoerexia, bulimia devastate life, families

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "When I die, I know I'm going to go to heaven. I've already been to hell here."

This is how Daniela Feldman describes coping with her youngest daughter Caron's eight-year struggle with anorexia and bulimia.

At 13, Caron was a happy, bright slightly overweight teenager. Now, at 21, a meagre 70 pounds is distributed over a 5 feet 4 inch body.

Her bodily functions are closing down, and family physician Dr. Eleanor Kopylenko has written in a letter shown to The CJN that "[in] the absence of treatment, Caron could die."

With the financial help of family friends, she is currently groping for what she realizes is her last chance — a $60,000 (US) course of treatment at the Radar Clinic in Los Angeles.

Anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa are high-profile diseases that, despite greater public awareness, generated in part by movies like The Famine Within and a recent 20/20 program, continue to rip apart families like the Feldmans and cause young women to die.

Dr. Allan Kaplan, head of the eating disorders program at the Toronto Hospital and associate psychiatry professor at University of Toronto, describes anorexia and bulimia as chronic psychiatric illnesses caused by factors which "put a young girl out of touch with her body."

The diseases, which affect women nine times more often than men, are characterized by an intense fear of weight gain, distorted body image and low self-esteem.

Anorexia is identified by drastic weight loss from excessive dieting. In bulimia, which may or may not accompany anorexia, the person suffers frequent weight fluctuations and periods of uncontrollable binge eating, followed by purging through vomiting and laxatives.

Anorexia occurs in just under one per cent of young adult women, and bulimia in just under two per cent.

Kaplan told The CJN that certain factors seem to put young women at risk: a self-esteem too closely linked to external considerations; being involved in activities where an undue focus is put on weight, such as modelling or ballet; depression or abuse.

Caron's struggle, according to her mother, began when her estranged father arranged for her to take diet pills at 13. It continued through her years at York Mills Collegiate in North York and at York University.

The rate of cure is not overly encouraging. Kaplan says one-half of those with anorexia or bulimia recover, although they are at increased risk for later problems like substance abuse and depression, along with residual health effects like a weakened heart and poor digestion.

Only half recover

Twenty to 30 per cent remain "somewhat ill," Kaplan said, while 10 to 20 per cent die, either from suicide or from starvation.

Treatment, which consists of individual or group therapy, hospitalization and behavior modification, is fraught with difficulty.

Therapist Rabbi Manny Klein began treating Caron nearly two years ago after she had seen a number of eating disorder specialists in Toronto. With her permission, he described to The CJN her troubled years filled with manipulation, family breakdown and the search for help.

Toronto student Caron Feldman before her illness.

Many anorexia and bulimia sufferers refuse to recognize their problem. Caron, for one, knew something was amiss although she lied to her family about her eating habits and wore baggy clothes to hide her skeletal frame.

Caron's mother and older sister tried to find help for her, but Caron claims nothing was effective. At one point she promised to eat if she was given a car, then when she got it ran away, her mother says.

Rabbi Klein and the Feldmans charge that treatment in Toronto is woefully inadequate. "There are long waiting lists first for assessment, then again for treatment,"

'Long waiting list for assessment'

Rabbi Klein said. "No one would tell us about treatment centres [in other places], and they weren't ready to pay for someone to be an in-patient."

Kaplan vehemently denies the accusations. "In Toronto we have probably the most comprehensive treatment facilities for anorexia and bulimia in the world. While there is a three-month waiting period for assessment, there is no wait for treatment."

While there are treatment centres in Canada, including those in Guelph, Ont., and Victoria, B.C., Los Angeles' Radar Clinic is the only place Caron and Rabbi Klein feel can she can get help. The full course of treatment could run to $100,000 (US), and is not covered by the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

A group spearheaded by Esther Greenbaum is determined to raise the funds. An auction sale at Hava Negila club in Thornhill brought in $20,000, and the effort is continuing. Tax deductible donations to help Caron can be sent to CK Foundation, 249 Spring Gate Blvd., Thornhill, Ont. L4J 3G3.

Warning signs

Warning signs of anorexia and bulimia include excessive concern about weight, shape and calories; depression or irritability; guilt or shame about eating; feeling fat when not overweight; excessive exercising, and strict avoidance of certain foods, especially those considered fattening.

For more information about anorexia and bulimia, contact the National Eating Disorder Information Centre, 200 Elizabeth St., CW 1-304, Toronto M5G 2C4 or telephone 416-340-4156.

IF STRESS, VIOLENCE AND FAMILY FRAGMENTATION ARE TAKING THEIR TOLL ON ADULTS...

JUST IMAGINE WHAT IT'S DOING TO OUR KIDS.

As the welfare rolls mount (323% in the last 5 years in Ontario alone) and family fragmentation grows (20% of all families are run by single parents today), life for many adults has become a cycle of constant stress and worry. This in turn rubs off on children who are very sensitive to what is happening around them.

Added to this is the alarming rate of violence witnessed by kids in their homes (estimated at 135,000 annually in Ontario).

The deterioration of mental health in children has now reached a very critical stage. Statistics show that 23% of all 3 year olds today have serious problems handling aggression, and that 71% of seriously aggressive 6 year olds grow up to be violent, anti-social adults.

If the new knowledge we have about effective prevention and treatment could be applied today, this alarming trend could be reversed. But funds are urgently required for community based training, research, consultation and public education.

So please, give generously. Remember, you are investing in something very precious that affects us all. The future of our children.

Life in the first world

Constructive criticism from friends is always welcome; indeed, good advice, well intended, is consequential to friendship. But the criticism last week of Canada by an editorial writer in the Wall Street Journal as having "now become an honorary member of the Third World" was past constructive. It was a supercilious rebuke intended to chasten the federal minister of finance preparing his budget for next month.

The remark was too cavalier to sit well with us and too ironic to be ignored. The Journal's view of "life in the first world" is apparently not bothered by an estimated 30 million people living without medical health insurance of any kind, or by a landscape of violent and abandoned inner cities inhospitable to individuals and businesses, or by a growing cleavage between middle class and underclass.

Every level of government in Canada, of all political stripes, has acknowledged the serious dangers inherent in spiralling deficits. The issue for Canadian governments is not whether to attack their respective budgetary deficits, but how. And here is where most Canadians are thankful for the different philosophy of governing which distinguishes us from Americans.

Rights of property are fundamental; but the rights of humanity are sacrosanct. Canadians believe that government has important responsibilities to the governed in addition to ensuring a free and honest marketplace.

They are responsibilities which the Jewish community understands and cherishes. We are taught: "If your brother becomes poor, and his means fail, strengthen and uphold him." (Lev. 25:5), or, "If there are needy people among you...you shall not harden your heart or close your hand..." (Deut.15:11)

In our view, these responsibilities are the core of democracy because the uniqueness and importance of individual human beings are the very reason for democracy.

A process of many perils

Has there ever been a government in Israel that did not have to agonize over decisions of life and death? From the inception of the state, every decade has had its war, and every war has brought its suffering.

Now the government of Yitzhak Rabin tries to avert war through the possibility of peace. But decisions about peace have brought their own agonies.

Indicative of the mounting frustration with the peace process, Shlomo Riskin, the chief rabbi of Efrat, warned last week of virtual civil insurrection and called upon the Diaspora to stop contributing to the United Jewish appeal. His outburst was irresponsible and dangerous. He recanted later.

In this week's CJN we have reproduced two articles on our Perspectives page which typify the anguished debate surrounding the peace process. Everyone acknowledges that the process has many perils. But would there be fewer perils without the process?

As the debate intensifies, we implore leaders in Israel and in the Diaspora to be temperate in their language and exemplary in their actions. We must avoid "sinat chinam", baseless, fraternal hatred. History has warned us often enough of its mortal dangers.

An anxious Network

The Jewish Students' Network is a country-wide organization attempting to serve the needs of Jewish university students in Canada. As reported last week in The CJN, there is a feeling of anxiety among Network's membership regarding the future of the organization. Whether the anxiety is justified or not, it must be clearly addressed.

Over the past three years, the Council of Jewish Federations (CJF), the main funder of Network, has been examining ways of developing a coordinated system of high quality services among the various Jewish youth groups on campus.

The national board of the CJF is convening in Toronto later this week. One of the items on their agenda will most likely be the issue of campus services for our young adults. We believe the board should take advantage of their meeting to allay student fears about the future of campus organizations, including Network. An appropriate pronouncement to that effect would be helpful.

Outlook brighter for leukemia patients

I am writing in regard to an article in the Jan. 5 edition of The CJN. As a medical oncologist specializing in the treatment of leukemia and in bone marrow transplantation, I feel it necessary to correct a gross inaccuracy about chronic myelogenous leukemia (CML), which may concern readers with the disease, their family and friends. I will not comment on the unfortunate young man described, as he is not my patient, nor am I aware of any details of his case, but I will describe the therapy of CML in general.

The only therapy that appears to be curative is bone marrow transplantation. For the lucky 10-20 per cent with related donors who are eligible, survival at greater than five years is roughly 90 per cent. For those electing transplantation from unrelated donors if available, survival at two years is 30 to 40 per cent, due to the increased toxicity of this procedure.

For those not electing or not eligible for transplantation, therapy is probably not curative, but the result is not as bleak as described in your article. Prior to the introduction of a drug called alpha interferon about 10 years ago, the median survival of non-transplanted patients with CML was about four years. That means half survived less than four years but half survived longer — I can personally recall two patients surviving for 17 and 19 years. With the proper use of interferon, the median survival has doubled and for the best responding groups of patients (roughly 30 to 40 per cent), 80 per cent or more are alive at 10 years. This is far cry from "no record of a CML patient living more than 42 months without a transplant."

Questioning establishment attitudes

I read with interest and sadness the article by Janice Arnold about education, income and intermarriage in the Jan. 5 edition. The sadness comes not from the statistics on intermarriage or the decline of the "mainstream" Jewish community, which is sad indeed, but rather from the establishment attitudes which it illustrates.

The first problem is with the study itself and not Ms. Arnold's reporting. If the article is correct, the study does not include among Jews those who have converted to Judaism. People who have undergone legitimate conversion have struggled much, have studied much and have adopted radical changes in their lifestyles. To exclude these people from our numbers is a gross insult to each of them personally, and is halachically unacceptable.

Even more disturbing is the review of the situation in our schools. I suppose there is some justification in breaking the numbers down linguistically, although I'm not sure what the justification is. But I cannot for the life of me understand why the ultra-Orthodox have to be in a distinct category.

To subtract and therefore to exclude any Jews from our midst for any reason at all seems to me to be totally unacceptable.

We are told that the second Temple was destroyed because of unwarranted hatred between Jews, and conversely one of the highest principles to strive for is Achdut Yisrael — the unity of Jewish people. Let us work to break down the barriers which separate us from each other and avoid using hyphens whenever we can. Converted Jews, ultra-Orthodox Jews, short Jews, tall Jews, skinny Jews! Let us emphasize the noun and not the adjective.

Reconstructionism: a work-in-progress

The CJN article (Nov. 24, 1994 based on a JTA report), "Reconstructionist Movement at a Crossroads After 40 Years," left me with a curious mixture of disbelief.

I would not have characterized the gathering with the word "confusion." If any significant confusion was voiced, it had more to do with the failure of the movement to educate its members to the mission of the movement and to its role in the larger world of Jewish life. People wanted help in identifying more strongly with the distinctive approach and character of the movement that had brought them into the Reconstructionist fold. Given the growth in Reconstructionist affiliations over the past decade, and the remarkable acceptance of our innovations and insights, why did we not take an even more assertive approach toward congregational and movement growth?

What I found most glaringly absent from The CJN article was the very heart of the Convention's deliberations, perhaps the most extraordinary feature of Reconstructionist congregational life: By viewing Judaism as a "work-in-progress" rather than a finished product, we invite everyone to learn how to participate in the process of decision-making. Every aspect of our congregational life is (or ought to be) focused on helping Jews know how, when and why to make Jewishly informed choices. The goal is to present a way of being Jewish that is founded on Jews choosing to practise their Judaism with love, caring, and devotion in every possible context and on every possible occasion.

Perspectives

— The painful path to peace —

A choice between agonies

By GARY ROSENBLATT

Rabbi Aharon Lichtenstein is not your typical rosh yeshivah. Though he heads Yeshivat Har Etzion in the Judean hills south of Jerusalem, one of the largest and most respected yeshivot in Israel, he is clean shaven, American-born and has a doctorate in English literature from Harvard.

During his recent impassioned defense of the religious imperative of sacrificing land for peace in Israel, Rabbi Lichtenstein, a recognized talmudic scholar, quoted passages from John Milton, Oliver Cromwell and Matthew Arnold, as well as a range of Torah texts.

The son-in-law of the late Rabbi Joseph B. Soloveitchik, Rabbi Lichtenstein is a living embodiment of the Torah u'madah (Torah study and pursuit of secular knowledge) philosophy that Yeshiva University espoused under his father-in-law's religious guidance.

A graduate of Yeshiva University, where he taught in both the secular and Judaic departments, Rabbi Lichtenstein made aliyah almost 25 years ago. Together with Rabbi Yehuda Amital, he heads the hesder yeshivah known as Gush, where Israeli young men combine intensive Torah study with active military service.

Shy by nature, Rabbi Lichtenstein has nonetheless taken bold positions on issues of religion, morality and politics in his assertion that the values of Orthodox Judaism can be compatible with the goals of the peace process, and that one's position on compromise of the land of Israel should not be a test of one's Zionism.

Speaking to more than 200 people at The Jewish Centre in Manhattan's Upper West Side, Rabbi Lichtenstein repeatedly referred to the "agonies of choice" regarding the peace process and said the decision comes down to carefully balancing a variety of factors. Chief among them are the mitzvah of holding on to the land of Israel, which is holy, and the mitzvah of saving lives and making peace, which are the highest priority.

Endorsing peace process

In a carefully reasoned talk, a kind of ideological endorsement of the process of peace rather than its results, Rabbi Lichtenstein said, "It is permissible, even desirable, to give up land, however painful that is," for the sake of averting war and achieving peace.

The talk was the first public program sponsored by Shvil Hazahav (the Golden Mean), a new organization calling on Orthodox Jews to participate in the peace process. Given Rabbi Lichtenstein's credentials as a halachic expert, his appearance was intended to encourage those supporters of Shvil Hazahav who feel embattled and outnumbered by those in the Orthodox community who oppose the peace process.

Addressing this defensiveness, Rabbi Lichtenstein said it is wrong to suggest that "the more hardline one is, the greater one's Zionism."

If you support the peace process, he said, "you are not one whit less a Zionist committed to territorial integrity."

The rabbi noted that there are serious risks in stonewalling Arab demands and maintaining the status quo in Israel, since the situation could deteriorate. But he was also highly critical of those Israeli leaders — presumably including Foreign Minister Shimon Peres — who seem motivated by economics as a reason for making peace, and who may feel that the settlements are an albatross they would gladly give up.

"Regardless of where one stands on the peace process," Rabbi Lichtenstein said, "one must feel a deep sense of pain." He said that while he would, regrettably, give up land to save human lives, he would not give up one square kilometre of the land to boost Israel's economy by increasing tourism or trade.

He compared giving up part of Eretz Yisrael to undergoing an amputation — a sad, painful process, only permissible if it becomes necessary to save the body.

Whatever one's views on the peace process, one came away from Rabbi Lichtenstein's talk impressed with the seriousness and thoroughness of his approach, his respect for those with differing views, and the deep anguish of the Jewish scholar applying halachic principles to a vital and painful situation.

In the tradition of the rabbis of the Talmud, Rabbi Lichtenstein said that the process itself of approaching and weighing an issue is as important as the conclusion — and that the process informs the decision. That is why he dismisses those on either side of the Mideast peace debate who view it as a simple black or white issue and why he pleads for civility in the discussion.

By all means engage in the debate, he said, but be prepared to not only hear your opponent, but to really listen with care and compassion.

Students say that in his own yeshivah, if Rabbi Lichtenstein speaks out on an issue, he invariably schedules a rabbi with another view to speak, so that students can be informed of both positions.

How many other rabbis or Jewish leaders in America or Israel are prepared to present an opposing view, on this or any other issue? That is what makes Rabbi Lichtenstein not only a man of letters, and a man of Torah, but a man of moral integrity as well.

Negotiating under the gun

By HILLEL C. NEUER

In Cairo and Washington, Israel's negotiators meet with Arab representatives to determine how much land Israel will surrender, and how soon. In exchange, Israel primarily seeks assurances of security: from the Syrians, demilitarization; and from the Palestinians, a commitment to fight terrorism. Yet, as the Arab spokespersons sit at the negotiating table calmly spelling out the manner and form in which they pledge to guarantee Israeli security, back home their leaders are tacitly — and sometimes actively — encouraging a campaign of terror and bloodshed against Israeli soldiers and civilians from the mountains of southern Lebanon to the coast of Tel Aviv. In a region where actions speak louder than words, Israel might wish to consider the value of the intangible promises it is now being offered and the wisdom of negotiating with a gun to its head.

Prime Minister Rabin explaining a point to Yasser Arafat while Shimon Peres listens.

For the past several years, and increasingly over the last few weeks, young Israeli soldiers defending Israel's northern communities from terrorist incursions have been returning home on stretchers and in body bags. The reaction of Israelis, who mourn as one large family, to the bloody sights on television naturally brings pressure to bear on the government to do something. The way Syria's President Hafez al-Assad apparently sees it, that "something" will be greater political compromise on withdrawal from the Golan Heights. The Syrian dictator assumes, not without justification, that if Hezbollah silenced its Katyushas and Kalachnikovs, Israelis might see little reason for giving up the strategic heights.

After all, the likelihood today of actual war with Syria is a fairly remote danger, almost negligible given Syria's loss of its erstwhile Soviet patron and the concomitant emergence of America as the world's only superpower. It is no wonder, then, that Assad feels the need to play the Hezbollah card, essentially waging a proxy war of attrition against Israel, while seemingly appearing peaceful by maintaining quiet along the Golan border.

As Ori Orr wrote recently in Al Hamishmar, although Hezbollah does not take orders from Syria as to the details of its attacks, it has always been clear — confirmed recently by Hezbollah itself — that the Iranian-funded terrorist group could do little without the Syrian green light. That Syria can shut down Hezbollah at will was evident from the false quiet imposed during U.S. President Bill Clinton's visit to Damascus.

The Palestinians also benefit through violence. Though Yasser Arafat may not be directly responsible for the current wave of terrorism, it is impossible for him to ignore the fact that the Israeli cabinet's response to terror thus far has been to accelerate transfer to the PLO of both money and legislative powers. Nor can he be unaware that when terrorism is directed against targets in the territories, Israeli cabinet members instinctively rush to badmouth the settlers, and call for the immediate dismantling of their "provocative" communities.

Crusade of brutality

Whether we term Arafat's blatant indifference to the Hamas crusade of brutality as criminal negligence or wilful blindness, his flagrant breach of the fundamental Palestinian obligation in the Oslo agreement — to fight terrorism "to his utmost ability" (to quote Rabin) — is sufficient to make one wonder if Arafat, like Assad, is shrewdly trying to create a context of pressure, in order to weaken Israel's negotiating stance.

That veteran thugs like Arafat and Assad are talking peace while practising the opposite should surprise no one. What is troubling, however, is that Israeli leaders are hardly speaking a word in protest, instead mumbling platitudes like "Lebanon can only be solved by a political solution with Syria." or, "Even we failed to eliminate terrorism when we controlled Gaza."

Of course, it is indeed true that Israel has been unable to militarily solve the problem of Lebanese terrorism and that a political settlement with Syria is likely the only route. But in the wake of a Hezbollah attack, would it not make more sense to step up international pressure on Syria, to demand a minimum standard of good faith during peace negotiations? To respond instead by calling for intensification of the talks is to fall right into Assad's trap, encouraging more of the same attacks in the future.

Defending Arafat's behavior with respect to Hamas makes about as much sense, and has the same encouraging effect. Furthermore, it is disingenuous for cabinet ministers to justify Arafat's failure to combat Hamas — even assuming he's trying — by pointing to the limitations experienced by Israel during its administration of Gaza. The Palestinians are not Israel; indeed, the whole point of the accord as it was trumpeted was precisely that the Palestinians were supposed to be able to do — Israel's liberal government was not concerned with the means — that which the Israeli army could not accomplish. If the solution of Oslo is that everything stays the same (or gets worse), where is the solution?

To be sure, the Israeli government would never reach the negotiating table if it held out for perfect conditions. But it might want to remind its unsavory interlocutors that both Egypt and Jordan got what they wanted by negotiating in peace and in good faith, and to remind itself that peace talks ought to be providing an end to violence, not an obstacle to its prevention.

The debunking of Israel's heroes

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

In a recent book which has received wide attention, author Stephen Carter claims we now live in a "culture of disbelief." This disbelief ranges from theology to just about everything that composes the common weal, and has significantly contributed to the insecurity which so many people feel.

Now, apparently, this latest culture virus has spread to Israel as well, and the Dec. 29 cover story of the Jerusalem Report devotes itself to the matter.

The new culture is aired on Israeli TV, seen in the theatre, and read in new books. Taken together they seem to say: What you have thought in the past was Zionist-Israeli history really wasn't so, and your presumed heroes were anything but.

Just about everybody who was anybody has fallen victim to the assault on national hero worship, from David Ben-Gurion to Moshe Dayan, Golda Meir, Hannah Szenes and even Theodor Herzl.

In a trenchant and disturbing article, Calev Ben-David identifies the old and new views; a popular idea of the person on the one hand, and the revisionist view suggested by a new class of debunkers on the other. Here are some examples:

In the heroic view, Ben-Gurion was, in a modern sense, a kind of prophet who felt he was destined to create an exemplary Jewish state. The revisionist view: Ben-Gurion and his colleagues are to be blamed for having done too little regarding the Holocaust. Aspects of the Ben-Gurion brand of socialism still get under the skin of most Israelis. He knew all about the massacre at De'ir Yassin.

Regarding Moshe Dayan, the accepted view was that he was a politician, military commander, archaeologist and patriot. The new view is that he was a womanizing, archeological grave-robber and scheming megalomaniac. He is also accused of deliberately sacrificing Israeli lives during the 1973 Yom Kippur War.

A traditional view of Golda Meir is that out of her strength she helped to create a nation, out of her spirit she helped mold a people. Revisionist writers call her stubborn, inflexible and say that because of that trait she made any peace with the enemy impossible.

Herzl, the man who created political Zionism, is now seen as "highly narcissistic," fathering children who became drug addicts, psychotics or suicides, and that in fact "he achieved nothing tangible politically."

So it goes. It appears to many observers that this latest development of Israeli culture is at bottom an attempt to be done with the concept of Israel as a special people. Rather, so the new historians seem to say, let us consider ourselves a people like any other people with all the warts and failures that other nations have.

No doubt some of this assault on memory has its healthy and important aspects. All these heroes were human beings with their strengths and their foibles. But I also believe that all of this is a phase of growing up, and in the end, the nation will have its heroes after all and cherish them, not as idealized figures, but rather as human beings who made an enormous impact on their people and raised it to a new level of vision and achievement.

"Heroes are the essential and healthy aspect of the psyche, not only of individuals, but of an entire society," says an Israeli psychiatrist. "They are beacons of identity on which we project our highest aspirations and goals."

Cataract surgery a 'miracle' for seniors

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

I no longer have any use for 15 pairs of glasses, the first of which I got at the age of 12 when I couldn't see the black board at Central High School of Commerce — 61 years ago.

I can see better now than when I was in high school, thanks to cataract extractions and implants on both my eyes, the eye operations which have performed the same miracle for thousands of other senior Canadians.

Even more seniors in our aging population will benefit in the future, because modern surgical techniques do not require a general anesthetic which poses risks for some elderly people. It is not unusual for people in their late 80s to have the operation.

Before the cataracts were taken out, I couldn't find my way to the bathroom without glasses, and even with glasses, I couldn't see the ball well enough to play indoor tennis under the lights. Not only did the operations liberate my winter tennis, I no longer had to wipe the sweat from my glasses in summer. And I drive with more confidence at night because I can see better.

Ben Rose: I can see clearly now

My ophthalmologist said a high percentage of people will no longer need glasses after cataract operations, although some will.

When I covered a seminar at Bernard Betel Centre last year on what young people think of seniors, I was amazed at how negative they were, saying that elderly people were lonely, handicapped and full of nostalgia. They were relatively unimpressed when I pointed out to them that many seniors have active lives and some have better eyesight than they ever had and lead fuller lives.

My first implant was in my left eye in 1989 and I needed a laser repair about a year later because the lens was a bit cloudy — a not unusual occurrence. When the cataract in my right eye was ripe enough for an operation earlier this year, the doctor booked me into hospital for day surgery. I also required a minor laser repair a few weeks later.

The beauty of today's cataract surgery is that the operation only takes about 20 minutes, it can be done in outpatient day surgery, and you are home within a few hours. Gone are the days when you had to stay in hospital for a week, your head between sand bags to prevent movement.

Over the years I acquired so many glasses because, as my eyes changed (my work as a journalist required lots of reading), I needed new lenses (some of them very thick ones). And this was in the days before some health plans covered the cost of glasses. I also needed prescriptioned sun glasses, which were the most expensive of all. What a relief it is today to wear non-prescriptioned sun glasses which can be replaced at little cost.

The demand for the cataract operation in the Toronto area today is such that a wait of from four to six months may be necessary before a day surgery bed becomes available.

Cleaning is not a four letter word

By Erica Meyer Rotstein

Let me say, first, in my own defense, that I have always done the cooking. I like to cook. It's creative, and when you're done, you get to eat. As household chores go, it's not so terrible.

On the other hand, I have always been willing to scrimp on some other expense so that I could pay someone else to come in periodically to clean up my house and do my laundry. I have never been a good cleaner, laundress or tidier-upper. And I have never cared. Until now.

This weather change came over me gradually.

First, I read a copy of Martha Stewart's pretty magazine at the doctor's office. Softly lit table settings, beds covered in crisp cottons, gleaming candlesticks with beeswax tapers, the magazine showed a dream world of perfection. But look, there was Martha, her cashmere sweater knotted over her button-down shirt. She was doing it. But could I?

It began with little steps. A flower arrangement updated. A few sea shells dusted.

Then, one morning, driven by impulse, I took all the junk — baskets of onions and garlic, vials of children's medicines, stray lids and kiddy art projects — off the wide window-sill in the kitchen. I dusted it. I lowered the white louvered blind and dusted that too. Then I put a row of colored bottles on the window sill in pristine display. The sun glinted through the stained glass. I was hooked. Somewhere, Martha chalked up another one.

A few days later, I bought new bedspreads and changed the look of my son's room. The next night, I stayed up late rearranging my daughter's closet.

I might have been able to brush off these domestic events as passing aberrations if Judith hadn't gotten sick. Judith is the lovely person who comes in periodically to do the floors, straighten up the house, dust, tidy and manage the laundry. She has pneumonia. She'll be back, her husband told me, in just a few weeks. A few weeks. It might as well be a decade.

He gave me this news on a Friday morning. Guests were coming for Shabbat dinner and I had believed that my only chore was to cook for them. When I learned I had to clean up for them, too, every spoiled-rotten bone in my desk-chair-shaped body protested. But, somehow, when they walked up our front path, my candles were lit, my table was set, the floor was clean (okay, it was streaked, but it was clean) and the house smelled like pine cleaner and chicken soup. If the guests had opened a single closet door, the falling debris would have ruined their hairdos, but as long as concealed clutter remained concealed, my house looked tended and tidy.

What an illusion.

Except, as the days have passed, the illusion is coming true. I'm on the do-your-own-heavy-cleaning diet. Mopping is aerobic exercise, I'm sure of it, and if it isn't, should be. I have burned calories neatening my kids' rooms. I have survived an entire lift-stoop-and-toe laundry cycle: collect it, wash it, dry it, sort it and restore it to its original location. I have become a matchmaker to stray socks. I've even gathered up a bundle of shirts I intend to iron, if things should come to such a pass.

To me, this is an amazing transformation. I have spent years avoiding domestic tasks whenever possible. I'm sure this great change would bear further analysis, but if you'll excuse me, the top edges of the picture frames need dusting, the sidewalk should be scoured, and I feel a sudden irrational need to go alphabetize my spices.

Economic cooperation needed

Reporting from Tel Aviv, Sheldon Kirshner describes a think-tank which creates models for future Arab-Israeli collaboration.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

"We are witnessing the birth of a new Middle East," Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres optimistically intoned at a recent conference in Casablanca, Morocco, designed to foster economic cooperation between Israel and the Arab world.

Time will tell whether Peres' prognostication was piercingly prescient or merely premature. But in the meantime, Gideon Fishelson — a Tel Aviv University economist — can take solace from the fact that fully half of the Israeli proposals presented at the historic meeting, the first of its kind, were originally conceived by a think-tank of which he is an integral member.

The Armand Hammer Fund for Economic Cooperation in the Middle East, with which Fishelson has been associated for the past decade, was established in 1980, following Israel's peace treaty with Egypt.

Haim Ben-Shahar, then president of Tel Aviv University, presented the idea to Armand Hammer, the late president of the Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corporation.

An astute businessman with interests in the Mideast, Hammer (and his friends) responded positively by providing a substantial operating grant. Like Shahar, he strongly believed that joint planning of economic relations between former enemies could serve as a catalyst for a peace settlement, and that once peace was a reality, economic cooperation could stabilize and enhance it.

To this end, the fund has published a series of monographs and books, and sponsored a number of lectures and conferences, to identify areas of mutual Arab-Israeli economic interest. Among the books published under its auspices have been The Economics of Peacemaking and Water and Peace.

Alive to its suggestions, the Israeli Foreign Ministry drew heavily on projects dreamed up by the fund's scholars and researchers. "These are our babies," said Fishelson, sounding much like a proud father.

Ticking off some of the proposals recycled by the Israeli delegation in Casablanca, Fishelson mentioned regional development projects, joint economic and business ventures and inter-country cooperation.

A practical man who eschews pie-in-the-sky economics, Fishelson cautioned that some of the projects approved by the fund are not yet strictly economical. As he put it, "They require further in-depth analysis."

What's more, he warned, the success of the Casablanca conference should not be exaggerated.

"Casablanca was more of a public relations exercise, an exploratory introduction to a new era in the Middle East. And its effect can only be judged in five or 10 years."

Nevertheless, he added, Casablanca effectively spelled the demise of the secondary and tertiary Arab economic boycott against Israel.

"Chief executive officers of multinational companies have already begun visiting Israel, which was practically unheard of several years ago. But the wheels won't begin to turn for at least several years."

According to Fishelson, a visiting professor at the University of Alberta in 1991, the fund has also made itself felt in related forums.

It had, and still has, a considerable impact on (1) a follow-up economic conference held in Jerusalem and attended by 3,000 participants from the Middle East, Europe, Africa and the United States; (2) the economic agreement signed by Israel and the PLO in Paris last spring; and (3) the current multilateral talks dealing with such topics as water resources and the economy.

Fishelson, a member of the fund's steering committee, has contributed several papers on future Arab-Israeli cooperation.

His interests run the gamut from regional water projects (involving Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Syria) to a Red Sea Riviera in which Israel, Jordan and Egypt would participate.

In addition, he has written about the building of a joint Israeli-Egyptian electricity generation and water desalination plant and the construction of an oil pipeline from the Persian Gulf to the Gaza Strip.

Water, being so relatively scarce in the Middle East, is high on his agenda.

Peering into the future, he recommends an agreement between Israel and Egypt under which water from the Nile would be piped to Israel and the Gaza Strip (which is partially under Palestinian control). And he calls for an accord in which Lebanon would sell surplus water from the Litani River to Israel.

A new border crossing linking Israel with Jordan was opened last autumn, highlighting the possibilities of trade between the countries.

Regarding Jordan, with which Israel recently signed a peace treaty, Fishelson said it is of the utmost importance that the two nations agree on joint management of the Jordan and Yarmuk Rivers.

Every year, upwards of 500 million cubic metres of the Yarmuk winter floods flow into the Dead Sea via the Jordan River and are wasted by evaporation.

Fishelson is fairly sanguine that Israeli commerce with Jordan will grow. The annual trade volume, he observed, could reach the $100 million (US) mark. (In a study released last December, the Israel Export Institute claimed the figure could be as high as $120 million within three years.)

With regard to Jordan, Fishelson envisions joint projects in textile manufacturing and in the tourist sector, particularly along the shores of the Dead Sea and the Red Sea.

"Jordan," he said, "can be the link between Israel and the Arab world."

The fund is bullish that Israel and its other Arab neighbors can and should engage in open, mutually beneficial trade.

Despite four decades of strife and bloodshed, Israel and its Arab opponents are alleged to have traded secretly through third parties. This clandestine connection has, at a minimum, generated trade worth tens of million of dollars annually.

But if Israel can end its dispute with the Arab world, the fund estimates, Arab-Israeli trade could theoretically skyrocket into the billions.

A monograph published by Meir Ben-Chaim, an Israeli scholar, envisages a yearly trade volume of $3.2 billion (in 1988 terms), representing 13 per cent and 3.7 per cent respectively of Israel's and the Arab world's exports. For the purposes of his evaluation, the Arab countries included in the study were Egypt, Syria, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates.

As Fishelson sees it, Israeli entrepreneurs will have an easier time adapting to the vicissitudes of the Arab market than their European and American competitors.

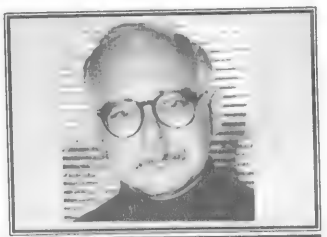
But having said that, he issued a stern caveat intended for his fellow Israelis. "We know little about Arab markets. We have to learn what they want. Otherwise, there will be tremendous failures."

And there is a danger, he elaborated, that overly aggressive Israeli entrepreneurs "will go too fast" and thereby foster a negative image of Israeli business practices.

"We don't want 'ugly Israelis' ripping off Arab citizens. Neither do we want, for example, to send Jordan Israeli rejects."

Israelis, Fishelson stressed, will have to treat their Arab colleagues as equals and to refrain from displaying a condescending we-know-it-all attitude.

If they can incorporate this sensible business etiquette into their sales pitch, they may well succeed where others have failed.



Jewish World

By Sheldon Kirshner

The centenary of the Dreyfus Affair was marked last year. It was an event of great historic import and one of the most painful episodes in the annals of modern Jewry.

It unfolded in three distinct stages: 1894-1897, 1898-1900 and 1901-1906. To this day, its lessons and implications still echo.

In the final analysis, public opinion shaped the affair and determined the fate of its main protagonist, Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, an Alsatian Jewish officer unjustly accused of espionage and high treason, stripped of his rank, tried and found guilty and sentenced to life on Devil's Island.

What had started as a minor military legal proceeding turned into an ideological civil war that rocked France to its very foundations.

Dreyfus' trials and tribulations are highlighted in a new exhibition at Beth Hatefutsoth, the Museum of the Diaspora on the campus of Tel Aviv University. It is entitled The Dreyfus Affair — The Battle for Public Opinion, and it runs until Feb. 26.

A captain in the artillery corps, the assimilated Dreyfus was the first Jew to serve on the French general staff. In November 1894, the anti-Semitic Parisian newspaper La Libre Parole claimed Dreyfus was the officer who had leaked secret documents to the German Embassy in Paris. Its headline screamed: "The Jewish officer A. Dreyfus is arrested."

Nearly everyone believed the calumny planted by a French officer and German spy named Walsin Esterhazy. Even Theodor Herzl — the Viennese journalist whom the affair ultimately converted into a Zionist — believed Dreyfus was guilty.

But Dreyfus had his defenders, notably Bernard Lazare and Emile Zola, whose pronouncements galvanized a nation and triggered a chain of events which exonerated the hapless Dreyfus.

As the exhibition makes clear, the chief combatants in the affair were intellectuals of the left and right — journalists, writers, academics and artists. Their principal weapons were the written word and the graphic arts. Their battlefield was largely the press.

In line with the exhibition's theme, the affair is filtered through the medium of lithographs, engravings, front page newspaper facsimilies, posters, postcards and photographs.

Perhaps the most famous single exhibit is Zola's legendary polemic in L'Aurore headlined J'Accuse, in which he blasts Dreyfus' enemies. A lithograph which rouses the emotions shows Dreyfus as he is demoted and disgraced, his sword broken by his fellow officers.

The major figures in the affair are portrayed in a series of engravings. Among them are Georges Clemenceau, Georges Picquart and Jean Jaures. Anti-Dreyfusard posters call for Dreyfus' execution. Anti-Semitic posters conjure up scurrilous conspiracies. A selection of six stark photographs depict his reinstatement in the courtyard of Ecole Militaire.

Beth Hatefutsoth's survey of the affair is succinct and sharp. It opens up new vistas of understanding about an affair that still resonates.

Rabbinic Reflections

By RABBI LEIGH LERNER

Yitro, this week's parshah, contains the Torah's first rendering of the Ten Commandments. With tongue in cheek, American country and Jewish singer Kinky Friedman once referred to them in a piece called, The Top Ten Commandments.

Every age raises up its own top 10 mitzvot. Emil Fackenheim, in proposing his 614th commandment, not to give Hitler a posthumous victory, elevates commandments of Jewish survival into the ranks of chief concern. Arthur Hugh Clough offered a different sort of ethical commentary in 1862, with his biting poem The Latest Decalogue.

Thou shalt have one God only; who Would be at the expense of two?
No graven images may be
Worshipped, except the currency.
Swear not at all; for, for thy curse
Thine enemy is none of the worse.
At church on Sunday to attend
Will serve to keep the world thy friend.
Honor thy parents; that is, all
From whom advancement may befall.
Thou shalt not kill; but need'st not strive
Officiously to keep alive.
Do not adultery commit;
Advantage rarely comes of it.
Thou shalt not steal; an empty feat,
When it's so lucrative to cheat.
Bear not false witness; let the lie
Have time on its own wings to fly.
Thou shalt not covet, but tradition
Approves all forms of competition.

Such rewordings as Fackenheim's and Clough's remind us that no matter how the Ten Commandments tower in our consciousness, their repetition over the centuries tends to make them commonplace, just as any oft-reiterated statement loses its force.

Another way to lend the Decalogue (Aseret HaDibrot) the vigor it deserves is to analyze every word of the commandments, searching for inner meanings which the plain text may not reveal.

For example, why do the Aseret HaDibrot begin with "... who took you from the Land of Egypt"? After all, remarks Judah Halevi, the Spanish Jewish poet and author of the Kuzari, it's a much greater achievement to have created heaven and earth than to have taken the Hebrews out of Egypt. Shouldn't the text begin, "I am the Lord your God who created heaven and earth"?

This poet and philosopher answers his own question, explaining that people believe their own eyes. No human eye saw the creation, but the Torah tells of the myriads who stood at Sinai witnessing the giving of the Law. Halevi asserts that we, too, can believe a moment of revelation reported by so many. So the Ten Commandments gain power when we sense God's connection to us Jews through the moment they were given.

Yeushzon quotes Shaar Bat Rabim in asking another question. Why does the Decalogue forbid images of anything in the heavens above or on the earth below? Wasn't it enough just to forbid images?

The phrase reminds us that, in spiritual matters, we should look up and learn, not of images for idolatry, but of proper behavior as manifested by those people, made in the image of God, who are above us in higher qualities. When we look down to the earth, we should remember that, regarding matters of the body, there are those less fortunate than we. Rather than give our attention to images, we should care for those made in the divine image who suffer.

Every age revitalizes the Ten Commandments in its own words and actions. May we take our turn in so doing.

Rabbi Leigh Lerner is the spiritual leader of Temple Emanu-El-Beth Sholom in Montreal.

Jackson-Vanik amendment turns 20

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Activists marking the anniversary of U.S. legislation that helped open the gates for Soviet Jewry say there is still much work to be done for those in the former Soviet republics, as well as for those who left.

Some 500 former Refuseniks, Prisoners of Zion and Western activists gathered in Jerusalem last week to mark 20 years since the Jackson-Vanik Amendment was signed into law on Jan. 10, 1975 as part of the Trade Reform Act.

Sponsored in the Senate by the late Henry "Scoop" Jackson (D-Wash.) and in the House by Charles Vanik (D-Ohio), the amendment made the granting to the Soviet Union of Most Favored Nation trade status contingent on free emigration.

Participants at the three-day conference agreed that the amendment, which was mostly the work of Jackson, was an important landmark, if not the turning point, in the struggle for Soviet Jewry.

It came as the Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford administrations were seeking detente with the Soviet Union. And it put the muscle of American law behind the efforts of a number of grass-roots organizations seeking to keep the issue of free emigration alive.

Activists say it was Jackson-Vanik which made the Soviets backtrack on crippling taxes designed to keep Jews from leaving.

The conference's chair, former Prisoner of Zion Natan Sharansky, stated that while in jail, "One of my interrogators claimed that amendment had cost the Soviet Union $20 billion, and asked me, 'Do you think you can pass this amendment and not suffer?' "

Shabbaton planned

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Known for their insight into contemporary Jewish issues, the charismatic husband and wife team, Rabbi Michel and Rebbitzen Feige Twerski of Milwaukee, will be in Toronto later this month for a Shabbaton and to give several lectures.

The Twerskis, who have devoted their lives to Jewish education and outreach, have visited Toronto on several occasions and have developed a loyal following. Married over 30 years, they are the parents of 11 children, and have 33 grandchildren.

Rabbi Twerski, a descendant of chassidic families whose origins are directly linked to the Ba'al Shem Tov, is the spiritual leader of Beth Jehuda Congregation in Milwaukee and active in the Torah Foundation of Milwaukee.

He received a master's degree in clinical psychology and has completed his course work towards a PhD in counselling psychology.

He counsels individuals and couples throughout the United States and Canada and is a full-time scholar-in-residence at Milwaukee's Yeshiva Elementary School and the Milwaukee Kollel.

A descendant of a Rumanian chassidic family, Rebbitzen (Stein) Twerski also draws her lineage from the Ba'al Shem Tov.

Beverley Burdeyney and Nancy Weisbrod are the co-chairs of the brunch and lecture. Reservations are required. Call 781-8033 or 782-1400.

For more information on the Shabbaton at Aish HaTorah, call 636-7530.

CJN Community Contests

The CJN is sponsoring four holiday contests.

For Purim we are looking for bright, colorful drawings from children in elementary school.

For Yom Ha'atzmaut we will be looking for an essay about Israel from junior and high school students.

For Rosh Hashanah we will be looking for colour photographs of Israel from the amateur photographers among our readers.

For Chanukah we will be looking for poetry from any of our readers inclined to write poems.

The Purim Contest

We are asking children in elementary schools to let their imaginations run loose through the drama of the story of Purim. In particular we are looking for the brightest, most colorful and evocative pictures drawn with markers, crayons, or colored pencils.

Who can enter:

Children from grades 1 - 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes:

The judges will choose one picture from two different contestants from each grade. These "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN Purim issue. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a gift certificate worth approximately $25.00 from one of our favorite stores.

How to enter:

Children may submit as many pictures as they want. However, the pictures should not be smaller than 5" x 7". You can draw on any paper you wish, but keep in mind we are looking for pictures which will show bright colors well and which we will be able to photograph for publication. You may use only markers, crayons or pencils. And you can give them a title if you want to as well.

Please send us your name, address, phone number, school and grade along with your drawings. Remember, we are looking for really interesting, bright, colorful pictures!!!

You may mail or deliver your pictures to:

CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1 If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.

The contest starts on January 19, 1995 and closes at 5:00 pm on February 28, 1995.

We will undoubtedly receive many wonderful drawings from children across the country. But only 12 of the pictures will be chosen for publication. The judges will base their decision on a number of factors such as: the use of color, the imaginative quality of the picture, and the way the picture tells part of the story of Purim. The judges decisions will be final. The odds of winning depend upon the number and the quality of submissions received.

How the Winner will be announced:

The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, March 3, 1995.

When will the prizes be awarded:

Learning fire safety in highrise apartments

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In the wake of a deadly highrise fire in North York fire officials are urging apartment dwellers to review their fire safety procedures.

"Unfortunately, it takes a tragedy like this to make people aware of fire safety," said Bev Gilbert of the Ontario Fire Marshall's Office.

Six people died Jan. 6 in a fire at 2 Forest Laneway in downtown North York. They succumbed to smoke while trying to reach the roof of the 30-storey building. The doors to the roof were locked according to regulations.

The deaths have focused attention on highrise safety in the province. The Ontario Fire Code was amended in October 1992 to bring older buildings over seven storeys up to improved fire safety standards. Those built before 1975 were given two years to comply with the changes, which became law last Oct. 9.

Bernie Silvestri, an engineer with the fire marshall's research and standards section in Toronto, told The CJN there are an estimated 220,000 highrise units in Toronto that need to be refitted under the new law.

Across Ontario at least 30 per cent of the refits have been inspected and approved, he said.

The changes include installing self-closing doors to keep fire from spreading into corridors, smoke alarms in every units, emergency lighting, and public address systems to relay instructions in buildings over 12 storeys.

Some building owners have applied for a two-year extension to complete the work, which can be lengthy, according to Silvestri.

The fire marshall's office has issued instructions for apartment tenants in case of fire:

- Never use an elevator.
- Feel suite door with the back of your hand; if warm place wet towels around door to seal cracks and remain in apartment. Call fire department. Remain calm.
- If you leave, close doors behind you but do not lock. Exit building via stairs.
- Do not go to roof.
- Practise escape plan once a year.

Romalis active in Jewish community

thank each one for all their good wishes. The number of people who have made contributions and sent me messages and expressed an interest in my health has been overwhelming."

Romalis is an active member of Vancouver's Jewish community. He chaired the 1992 Jewish Federation of Greater Vancouver Combined Jewish Appeal.

Though he is still recovering from the wound that at first was life-threatening, Romalis said he is "getting better. I hope to go home very soon, but I have a long rehabilitation. It will take me a long time before I can resume my activities. I expect to eventually be able to do everything that I used to do before I got injured."

He attributed a great deal of his recovery to his family.

"They have been strong and supporting. No one can be more supportive than they are," he said, his voice cracking with emotion.

Considering everything that happened, Romalis said he's "one very lucky guy."

"I wasn't lucky to get shot. But after that, everything was lucky. I was lucky to live. I was lucky to have my leg saved. I was lucky to live in a community that has tremendous medical resources. I'm lucky that I have such support from the medical community, the Jewish community and former patients."

Though he remembers every detail of the shooting, which occurred as he was eating breakfast in his kitchen, he prefers not to rehash the moment.

He does not believe though, that the person who shot at him was a professional hitman, as has been suggested in some media reports.

"I don't know why he picked me. If he was a professional hitman, I would have been killed. I wouldn't be speaking to you," Romalis said matter-of-factly. "He was shooting to kill. You don't use a weapon like that (an AK-47 assault rifle) to scare someone."

Reflecting on speculation that there may be an anti-abortion/right-wing extremist link to the shooting due to the fact that Romalis is both Jewish and performs abortions, he offered, "I don't think I was shot because I was Jewish. I feel the press has fleshed out a lot of fringe people and given them a lot more credibility and press than they deserve.

"We don't know why he shot me," Romalis said. "We assume, based on an intelligent guess, that he shot me because I'm a doctor who does abortions."

The B.C. government has taken the possible link to the far-right seriously. The province's attorney-general recently set up a special police unit to probe ties between the extremist right and the anti-abortion movement [CJN, Jan. 12].

And the B.C. Medical Association (BCMA) announced in December a $100,000 reward for information and answers to what association president Dr. Mark Schonfeld called an "unacceptable violent act."

However, Vancouver Police spokesperson Const. Anne Drennan told the JWB that there have been no new leads and no tips in the case.

"We're in the same position as at the time of the shooting," she said.

Arafat: 'We are paying price of peace'

After a moment's silence, Arafat launched into an exposition on the current situation. Two aides sat beside him, one taking notes. "I am sorry to say," he began, "but we are paying the price of peace."

Speaking in broken, unidiomatic English, Arafat fired off a litany of complaints. Contrary to the Declaration of Principles agreed upon in Oslo in 1993, he said, Palestinian elections had not been held, nor had there been a redeployment of the Israeli army. Furthermore, he added, donor nations had channelled less than 10 per cent of the $700 million in development funds they had solemnly pledged to the Palestine National Authority for 1994.

Sheldon Kirshner meets Yasser Arafat in Gaza City.

A promise to disarm fundamentalists

Turning to another topic, Arafat promised to disarm the Islamic fundamentalists of Hamas and Islamic Jihad — the "enemies of peace" — who oppose the Oslo process and Israel's very existence. He charged that the Shin Bet, Israel's internal security agency, had flooded Gaza with arms in a bid to weaken and discredit the Palestine National Authority.

As he meandered on, his aides nodding in agreement, he alternately flashed an amiable smile, grew visibly tense and angry and jabbed a finger into the air.

When the session was over, I approached Arafat. I conveyed one message: Israelis I knew were growing impatient and disillusioned with the Palestinian peace track because of the upsurge of terrorism, largely perpetrated by Islamic fundamentalists. As I elaborated upon my theme, he took my right hand, clasping it firmly in a friendly gesture.

Arafat nodded, saying he understood my concern. He quickly changed the subject, chiding Israel for not releasing thousands of Palestinian prisoners or agreeing to let him call democratic elections.

We filed out of Arafat's office, flanked by a phalanx of watchful security men. Outside, in the sunshine, we were photographed yet again.

Revving up his engine, the Palestinian outrider led us to our next appointment before escorting us out of Gaza.

Loving family the secret to matriarch's long life

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "I did it, I feel fine, and I'm not senile," said Goldie Grafstein on being reminded of her wish to make it to 100, expressed in a CJN interview four years ago.

Several weeks before her recent 100th birthday party, Grafstein already had her speech written. "I wish I had some good wisdom or advice for you all," she told her family on the festive occasion at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care. "I guess the secret is being lucky enough to have had nine children and being surrounded by love all my life."

With 78 direct descendents, including five great-great-grandchildren, Grafstein is not only a matriarch but, through her letter-writing, a mainstay of her large, extended family.

Last year, a book of reminiscences was published for her family. She wrote it while in her 90s, and two granddaughters edited it.

"I left home almost 50 years ago, and every week Mother has written me wonderful, warm letters and kept me in touch with most of the [150] people in this room," said daughter Tilley Levine of Vancouver at the party.

Grafstein corresponds regularly with a number of relatives, including her 96-year-old sister in Reno, Nevada, who travelled to Toronto for the celebration. A cousin from London, England, Grafstein's birthplace, represented the English branch of the family, with whom Grafstein also corresponds.

A copy of Grafstein's birth certificate, reproduced on the cover of the party invitation, shows that she was born Goldina Adelaide Gollom on New Year's Eve, 1894, at 56 Settles St. to Sarah and Michael Gollom. As a kindergarten student she received a keepsake postcard from Queen Victoria, who visited her kindergarten class.

She immigrated to Toronto at age 15 and worked in a coat factory before marrying Moishe Grafstein, a Polish-born entrepreneur, when she was 19.

An accomplished seamstress and baker, Grafstein was constantly tending to her growing family: Pearl (Kaplan), Sarah (Solomon), Rose (Dolgy), Molly (Brown), Rickey (Hoff), Tilley (Levine), Chippie (Feldman), Sonny (their only son, who died of cancer in 1984), and Budgie (Frieberg).

"In those days it was hard. Today children wear jeans, but I had to make petticoats," she said.

"Every day at 3:30 or 4 there would be half a dozen freshly baked pies," recalls Budgie Frieberg, Grafstein's youngest daughter. "We would think nothing of coming in with three or four friends."

Moishe would often bring guests home for dinner, including the staff of his silk store and, once, an American tourist who had asked him where he could get a good kosher meal.

"When you find your right hand cleaning up the kitchen, while your left hand is still cooking, you know your life has been influenced by her," said MC David Frieberg, her 18th grandchild, who exchanges weekly letters with Grafstein from his home in New York. "Or [when] you see an overripe banana as an opportunity...or when you learn to shrug off adversity or pettiness and just get on with living."

About a decade ago, Grafstein, who was widowed in 1968, wangled a job for herself baking banana cakes with chocolate fudge icing for Just Desserts. On a visit to the cafe, she had tried their banana cake and told the owner that her own cakes were much better.

Grafstein maintains an active interest in the outside world and reads the Toronto Star and The Canadian Jewish News regularly. "I like to know what's going on in the world," she says. "It could be a lot better. All these guns, knives and shooting, and a woman drowning her children."

A longtime Liberal voter, Grafstein approves of Jean Chretien as prime minister. "He seems very honest."

While in her 90s, Grafstein campaigned for her grandson, veteran Liberal politician Bob Kaplan. Her daughters still remember the speech she made at a senior citizens' home, telling the residents how lucky they were to be living in Canada.

Grafstein lived in her own apartment until last February, when she entered Baycrest Hospital following abdominal surgery.

She credits her longevity to keeping busy and going to bed early every night.

Sports chain to open store in Lawrence Plaza

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A major American sports chain set to open a giant retail store in the heart of Toronto's Jewish community is just one of many new developments in the Lawrence-Bathurst area.

The 50,000-sq.ft. Sport Mart, occupying part of the vacant Bay store in Lawrence Plaza, will open in late spring, according to an official of Frum Development Group. Renovations to the former department store have begun.

The Sport Mart will be at least three times the size of any sporting store in Toronto.

But not everyone is happy with the prospect of the mega store. Located at the busy corner of Bathurst Street and Lawrence Avenue, the store is a "major traffic concern" for neighborhood residents, said David Nitkin, president of the Four Quadrants Neighborhood Alliance, a residents group.

Nitkin told The CJN that because the plaza's parking lot is now three-quarters full, extra cars will only spill onto surrounding streets. "There is not much we can do, no zoning changes are needed," he said.

The Sports Mart lease is for eight years, a Frum official said, and the new store will occupy the ground floor and a portion of the basement of the now-vacant Bay building.

A planned 12-storey office tower for the site has been deferred, and a supermarket in the plaza's southwest corner is also on hold, but the alliance would like to see a full-range food store, hardware store, dry cleaners, shoe repair and barber shop in the plaza.

The residents' group is happier with another Lawrence Plaza development project, which has seen two 12-storey condominiums planned for the north side of Covington Street replaced by two seven-storey condo buildings.

"The project represents a much nicer and more compatible scheme than its predecessor, which had to be cancelled with return of down-payments," an alliance newsletter states.

Construction of the first 87 units in this project will start in mid-April and 60 per cent of the units have been sold, said Alan Saskin, president of UrbanCorp Group. The two- and three-bedroom units, known as Homes of Lawrence Park West, range in price from $130,000 to $195,000 and will be ready for occupancy by fall, Saskin said.

About half the purchasers are first-time home buyers who want to live in the area, and the other half are retired people who have sold their own homes in the neighborhood.

The 85-unit Willmar Eight Housing co-op at the corner of Covington Road and Brucewood Crescent is now fully occupied. About half the residents work at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Visa data processing complex on Lawrence Avenue West. The co-op residents are a mix of families and singles, from all ethnic and economic backgrounds.

NEW OTTAWA NURSERY SCHOOL

As of this year, the Tiny Treasures Playgroup in Ottawa is now a fully licensed nursery school, offering both a junior and a senior program designed to familiarize Jewish children with their religion, heritage and traditions. Sephardi studies get boost with new learning institute

TORONTO — Several hundred enthusiastic members of Toronto's Sephardi community recently celebrated the opening of The Sephardic Institute of Torah Study.

The institute, also called the Medrash Torah Vehayim, offers a wide variety of courses and lectures on Torah subjects that will appeal to Sephardim from all backgrounds and affiliations.

Courses are offered Sunday mornings and Monday to Thursday evenings at 7000 Bathurst St., in the Main Exchange Mall at Steeles and Bathurst.

A press release said that "it will offer individuals a Sephardi alternative to the existing worthy institutions [in Toronto]."

Rabbi Amram Assayag, spiritual leader of Petach Tikva Anshei Castilla synagogue and founding head of Medrash Torah Vehayim, said he founded the institute to unite the Sephardi community through the study of Torah.

"We come from a proud and rich culture. We have a duty to be the transmitters of the past. We must preserve our history."

Rabbi Amram Assayag

Courses include an examination of world events and issues from a Torah perspective; the weekly parshah; prayer; Talmud and Halachah in daily life. Sephardi customs, traditions and outlook on the world are stressed.

Some courses are mixed, while others are for either men or women.

The Sephardi community of Toronto has about 2,000 families, the release says.

For more information on the institute, call the Medrash information line, 636-2313.

Toronto-born goalie rides sport's highs and lows

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It's been a year of ups and downs, with good luck following bad for Toronto-born goalie Erik Goldhar.

Last season he was riding high, backstopping St. Michael's Buzzers, one of the prestige teams in Metro Junior A hockey, and earning his third annual appearance in the league all-star game.

So impressive was his puckstopping ability that after St. Mike's was eliminated in the playoffs, rival teams, first from Wexford and then from Caledon, acquired his contract to help them in their hunt for the Centennial Cup.

Scouted by high-profile U.S. colleges for a couple of seasons, Goldhar chose to join the hockey program at the NCAA Division 1 college, Kent State. The 5 foot 11, 170 lb. goalie was anticipating the move to Ohio when he learned in May that the hockey program at the school had been cancelled.

Ouch. With most top colleges already set in goal for the upcoming season, Goldhar and his father, Mel, were left scrambling to find a good alternative.

Enter the Rochester Institute of Technology (RIT), a Division 2 school that made it to the league finals last year. Offered the chance to pursue his studies in criminal justice while tending the twine, the 20-year-old netminder accepted the last-minute offer.

He set out for Rochester with the expectation that, as a freshman, he'd probably spend most of the 28-game season riding the pines as a backup. Instead, the southpaw goalie has started in eight of the Tigers' first 10 games, posting a 4-4 record for the .500 team. His goals-against average is 4.1 and he sports a respectable .863 save percentage.

Erik Goldhar was a three-time all-star with St. Mike's Buzzers in the Metro Junior A league.

Tigers' assistant coach Thomas Masaschi said Goldhar's quickness and wealth of junior experience have given him an edge in earning the starting assignments.

"He has a quick glove hand and is a relaxed and confident goalie. He has a lot of respect from other players," Masaschi said.

Despite that solid recommendation, Masaschi believes Goldhar's potential is still untapped. Considering he's a freshman living in a new environment and has a four-year college career ahead, Masaschi expects Goldhar to continue to improve his game.

For Goldhar, making the transition from junior hockey hasn't been a piece of cake. "It's a lot faster [in college]" and the work regime is a lot more demanding, he said. Practices are held from Monday to Thursday and afterwards it's into the gym for weight training. On weekends the team plays two games and then the cycle starts all over again.

Division 2 hockey doesn't get the notice garnered by the higher profile Division 1, but Masaschi said the calibre is not that different. Goldhar believes that Division 2 is home to more grinders and muckers than Division 1, but it is good enough to attract the attention of minor league scouts, looking for future prospects for the International, American, East Coast and Colonial leagues.

Looking ahead, Goldhar said he wants to finish his college career and then get a crack at a professional minor league team. From there, who knows?

In the meantime, Goldhar is hitting the books and minding the cage, working on his butterfly style and keeping his goals focused on the next step in his hockey career.

BB may fight entry of anti-abortion activist

They say that Jews are active in HLI and that HLI singled them out to show that the victims of one holocaust should not be complicit in another [against the unborn] and contribute to their own destruction.

One recent report quoted Father Marx as saying that HLI, which he founded 14 years ago, will also be opening an office in Israel and will have rabbis speaking at their conferences.

Scheinberg, however, remained unconvinced.

While it is possible that Jews have participated within HLI — among the names listed for the Montreal conference are Dr. Bernard Nathanson and Judith Reisman — Scheinberg believes they may be sincere but unwitting dupes.

At writing, Scheinberg said he was disappointed that BB had not yet received a formal response to a letter it sent to Cardinal Jean Claude Turcotte, asking him to rescind permission for HLI to use the Notre Dame Basilica for an opening mass.

CJC sent letter

CJC sent a letter to the conference's host hotel to make it aware of Father Marx's history.

Last week, Msgr. Neil Willard of the Montreal archdiocese indicated that the Church will allow the mass to take place.

He was quoted as saying that although Father Marx's past comments were "unacceptable," HLI is not necessarily anti-Semitic, since it attacks all groups it considers "anti-life."

The main objection BB has had to the Church's allowing the mass, Scheinberg said, was that an impression would be left that it shares HLI's "hatred" for individuals who are pro-choice.

"The Catholic Church has always hated the act [of abortion], but not the actors," he said. "HLI spreads hatred for the actors."

CORRECTION

The article, "Shaare Zedec Foundation starts campaign," (CJN Jan. 5), should have indicated that the Neonatology Department of Shaare Zedec Hospital treats approximately 500 babies a year. The unit can accommodate 26 infants at one time.

The CJN regrets the error.

Silverman's Bakery founder dies

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Elias Silverman, founding owner of Silverman's Bakery, died last month at the age of 78, after a brief illness.

The bakery, which was located on Bathurst Street south of Glencairn Avenue, was one of a handful of kosher bakeries in Toronto. For almost 30 years until his retirement in 1988, Silverman supplied many local synagogues with challah and other baked goods.

Elias Silverman

Silverman's was a popular destination for schoolchildren who stopped in for doughnuts or chocolate "Kokosh" (a yeast-based cake) said Silverman's daughter Barbara Gerskup. Small children were always treated to fresh-baked cookies. "They didn't have to ask; they just had to smile," she recalls.

"It gave him pleasure to bring pleasure to other people," said Silverman's son Albert. "He used to insist on opening for Pesach because he felt a responsibility to the community."

Until last Rosh Hashanah, Silverman baked challah and chocolate chip cookies every week for each of his four children and their families.

Born to an Orthodox family in Chmelow, Poland, where he married his wife Dora 52 years ago, Silverman worked in his family's flour mill and cooking oil factories as a young man.

He and his wife survived the Holocaust — separately — in concentration camps. They were reunited in Germany when the war was over. Both had lost their immediate families, but Silverman harbored no bitterness about the past, Gerskup said. "He was always smiling, always happy."

A founding member of Shaarei Tefillah Congregation, Silverman was an unassuming man who supported many charities.

"He was completely devoted to his wife, children and grandchildren," said Rabbi Moshe Stern of Shaarei Tefillah. "He ensured the Jewish continuity by educating his children in the path of Torah."

Silverman is survived by his wife Dora, children Albert, Murray, Susan Jutcovitch and Barbara Gerskup, and 13 grandchildren.

CJC seeks meeting with Art Eggleton

Peter Kremer, head of the war crimes unit, said Justice will participate in the announcement with Immigration. "It's a question of semantics if [the announcement] is major or not," he said. "It will clear the air [and state], 'Here's what we're doing.' "

Kremer suggested that the war crimes unit has all but given up on laying criminal charges against suspected war criminals. Instead, the unit is focusing on the denaturalization and deportation remedy.

White acknowledged that proceedings under the Citizenship Act can cost $150,000 per case.

Meanwhile, Abella said Congress will not withdraw its request for a meeting with Art Eggleton, president of the Treasury Board, which funds government departments.

"It's an opportunity for Eggleton to make clear that the government is supportive of prosecutions and the departments of Justice and Immigration can count on the appropriate funding," Abella said.

"We know there have been constraints and cutbacks," he continued. "We're just not prepared to accept cutbacks beyond this administration. It's not something they can delay."

In a news release issued late last week, B'nai Brith Canada (BBC) reacted angrily to the report that it may be too expensive to bring alleged war criminals to justice.

"Justice has no price tag and Mr. Marchi's reported statements are unacceptable," said Frank Dimant, BBC executive vice-president.

For several years, Jewish organizations including Congress and BBC have been urging prosecutors to switch their focus from criminal cases to denaturalization and deportation proceedings. (Kremer said investigators always consider all remedies when examining files.)

Since its inception in 1987, the war crimes unit has launched four criminal cases. In three, charges were dropped; in the fourth, former Hungarian gendarmerie captain Imre Finta was acquitted of charges of robbery, forcible confinement, kidnapping and manslaughter in connection with the 1944 deportation of 8,617 Jews.

The unit's only success came against Jacob Luitjens, a former Dutch Nazi collaborator whose Canadian citizenship was stripped and who was deported to Holland in 1992, where he was jailed.

Kremer told The CJN that "given the difficulties in proving a criminal case, which were identified by the majority of the Supreme Court of Canada in Finta, given the evidence in investigations we have now completed, we've made the decision that criminal prosecutions are not viable ... At this time there are no cases in the inventory where the investigation is completed that would justify criminal [proceedings]."

Kremer said the war crimes unit has more or less met its target of completing investigations in 20 high priority cases.

Ouellet delays trip to Israel

OTTAWA — Foreign Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet has rescheduled his visit to Israel, a ministry spokesman said last week.

The visit, originally planned for next week, has been put off until later this year, spokesman Rodney Moore told The CJN on Friday.

Ouellet's trip to Israel was not postponed or cancelled, Moore stressed. "Scheduling difficulties" on both sides made a trip this month impossible, he pointed out.

A precise date for a visit to Israel and not been worked out yet, Moore said.

Ouellet was to visit Israel, Jordan, Lebanon, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. The itinerary has been pared to Kuwait and Lebanon from Jan. 25-28.

The minister is scheduled to hold talks with officials and to re-open Canada's embassy in Beirut.

Domestic violence forum

TORONTO — Women's concerns regarding domestic violence will be addressed in a Hadassah-WIZO Women for Women breakfast program on Jan. 22 at the Richmond Hill Country Club.

The panel will discuss Domestic Violence: How Can We Break the Cycle?, focusing on the recognition and early prevention of this pervasive problem. This will also be an opportunity to learn how the work done in Israel links with events in the local community.

Speakers will be Catherine Fox, Yellow Brick House Women's Shelter; Mary Lou Fassel, Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic; and Joan Hurley and Blanche Wiseman, Jewish Family & Child Services.

Hadassah-WIZO supports shelters for battered women, 24-hour hotlines, rape crisis centres, legal advice bureaus and information centres.

A buffet breakfast will be included. Cost for the morning is $18 per person.

Israel tourism sets record

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — By at least one account, tourism to Israel set a record last year, with far more Christians visiting than Jews.

According to the Tourism Ministry, the number of tourists to Israel in 1994 topped 2 million for the first time.

But the Central Bureau of Statistics put the number at 1.8 million.

The discrepancy is because unlike the ministry, the bureau does not count as tourists those who arrive by ship. The seafaring are considered mere visitors.

Depending on which figure is used, tourism to Israel rose in 1994 by between eight and 11 per cent over 1993.

Not in doubt is the fact that Christians represented 63 per cent of all tourists, with Jews comprising 26 per cent.

Over 60 per cent of tourists were first-time visitors. Each tourist spent an average $1,250 while in Israel.

The country sending the most visitors was the United States, with about 385,000. Other nations topping the list were Germany (200,000); Great Britain (190,000); and France (162,000).

The past year showed an increase in tourism from Eastern Europe, Asia and Egypt.

The number of tourists entering after visiting Jordan jumped 49 per cent, to 96,800, due to the opening of the Arava border crossing in August and the Jordan River crossing in November. Tourists who came after visiting Egypt rose 17 per cent, to 182,200.

Rabin says top priority is 'united Jerusalem'

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service and Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin repeated his government's commitment to "a united Jerusalem, that is the eternal capital of the State of Israel" during a much-awaited tour of the Israeli capital last week.

"The top priority for all of us is a united Jerusalem, under Israel's authority," Rabin said.

Later he explained that his commitment was to Jerusalem within its present borders and not necessarily to "greater Jerusalem," which includes nearby settlements.

"I have always opposed, and continue to oppose, a return to the '67 borders," Rabin said. At the same time, he said he was against annexing areas that would endanger the state's Jewish majority.

Rabin stopped short of approving increased funding for the city, which Mayor Ehud Olmert says is needed to give the government's commitment real meaning.

Olmert asked Rabin to give Jerusalem the tax breaks and additional state funding given "front line communities." The mayor also asked for millions of shekels in funding for new infrastructure, roads, housing, and education in Jerusalem. The additional development is needed to "ensure that Jerusalem remains unified."

Olmert spent much of the visit pushing for increased funding for Arab neighborhoods, on grounds that continuing to ignore the needs of the Arab population hurts Israel's claims to the city.

Rabin said his government would move to strengthen the unification of Jerusalem through development within the city's boundaries.

But he hinted that such expansion could mean slower development of outlying communities east of the capital, including the Gush Etzion settlement bloc in the West Bank.

His remarks came in the wake of this month's controversy over the expansion plans of Efrat, a Gush Etzion settlement. The government decided to stop Efrat's plans to build at a designated site after Palestinians threatened that the move could halt the peace process.

Instead, the government worked out a compromise with the community to build on another site.

During his tour, Rabin said Jerusalem must be given priority in housing and other public services.

But "the other areas on the periphery are a different issue."

For Rabin, who oversaw the capture of the eastern half of the city in 1967 as the Israel Defence Force Chief of Staff, the visit he made to the Old City was his first during his current term as prime minister.

He was accompanied by Olmert and by Housing Minister Binyamin Ben Eliezer, who described plans to build 30,000 apartments in the city over the next five to six years.

Jerusalem is currently home to some 405,000 Jews and about 160,000 Palestinians.

Commision to probe missing Yemenite kids

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Israel's cabinet has agreed to appoint a state commission of inquiry to investigate the disappearance of Yemenite children in the 1950s.

The children had been part of a massive airlift, known as Operation Magic Carpet, that brought tens of thousands of Yemenite Jews to Israel from 1948 to 1950.

Some leaders in the Yemenite community have alleged that Israeli authorities at the time abducted the children and sold them for adoption in Israel and abroad.

The cabinet's decision came four weeks after another committee — headed by retired Judge Moshe Shalgi and appointed six years ago to investigate the matter — issued its findings.

That committee examined 505 cases, and determined that in all but 65, the children died of various illnesses.

The committee also concluded that the children for whom no documentation was found had also probably died of disease.

It found no evidence supporting allegations by some leaders in the Yemenite community that the children were sold for adoption.

In March of last year, about 10 heavily armed members of a Yemenite sect led by Rabbi Uzi Meshulam holed themselves up in a fortified house near Tel Aviv, protesting what they described as the "disappearance and sale of thousands of Yemenite children."

Rabbi Uzi Meshulam

They demanded the Knesset conduct an inquiry into the fate of an undetermined number of Yemenite babies who disappeared during 1949 and the early 1950s.

Rabbi Meshulam's followers were dispersed following a massive police raid, and several sect members were arrested.

Doctors who recall the period, when tens of thousands of Yemenites arrived in Israel, say hospitals were ill-equipped in the development towns to which the immigrants were assigned. Many children died and many were taken into hospitals without being properly registered.

Labor Knesset member Avigdor Kahalani, who joined other MKs in drafting a bill to set up a state commission, welcomed the government's decision.

He said it was an important gesture toward the Yemenite community, for whom the fate of the children is a painful episode in their history.

"This commission will give the feeling to the families that somebody cares about them," he said. "I think maybe we will find new documents, meet new people that didn't speak to investigators before and I think we will find more facts."

In December, after receiving the Shalgi committee report, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin described the disputed disappearances as "one of the most painful periods in the history of the State of Israel."

The disposable divorce era

A certain Rabbi was giving marital counselling in accordance with the most noble of Jewish Tradition. He turned to the wife and told her that she was overly emotional, unreasonable and unfair. He then turned to the husband and said: "Do what she says". Perhaps only a married person can understand this advice.

In the era of the disposable diaper, disposable marriages have become trendy. If you don't like something, get rid of it. So, if someone irks you, get rid of her/him. When's the last time you darned your socks? Since the Divorce Act was amended in 1985, divorce is virtually automatic after one year of separation even if the income-earning spouse deserts his family.

At the time, many thought these amendments would herald freedom for women chained to their husbands. Unhappy spouses could leave their relationships and remarry after one year of separation, rather than the previous three year wait (or five years if you deserted your spouse). Indeed, there is no doubt that the divorce rate has increased dramatically since these changes helped fashion the disposable relationship. Moreover, recent Supreme Court of Canada decisions (such as Moge) have legally confirmed that women after divorce fare far worse than men economically. Indeed, the increase in divorce rates has given us new phrases such as "the feminization of poverty", and "Orthodox Jewish Singles". The number of poor women and children has risen dramatically across Canada since getting divorced was made easier. (Sorry, I hate the word "underprivileged"; euphemisms cloud reality).

Please don't misunderstand me. No one who is the victim of spousal abuse or who truly needs to be free should have to wait three years just to remarry. (Indeed, in Jewish law, there is usually no waiting period when both parties consent to a divorce). That is not the type of case to which I refer. Rather, I mourn those relationships that ended because they were "boring" and someone didn't bother trying a little harder. Changes in law affect moral behaviour, if only because the perception of moral reality changes. And the liberties we seek can create unforeseen hazards, once obtained. As Shakespeare said in Hamlet: "Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind".

Fortunately, many lawyers take Section 9 of the Divorce Act very seriously. A lawyer must urge a spouse to seek marriage counselling, unless the circumstances of the case are of such a nature that it would clearly not be appropriate to do so.

Yad Vashem is no longer a must for guests

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Israel's foreign ministry will no longer require its guests to visit Yad Vashem, and visitors wishing to tour the Golan Heights must now request a visit.

The ministry will now only recommend that first-time visitors visit the Holocaust memorial.

A ministry spokesman said the new guidelines were issued by Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin earlier this month, after convening ministry officials to discuss Israel's standard itinerary for guests.

Efraim Zuroff, Israel director of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, attacked the new Yad Vashem policy.

"It is patently absurd that the foreign ministry is only recommending that first-time visitors go to Yad Vashem. Any person who wants to understand why the existence of the Jewish state is so important has to understand the Holocaust and its implications."

In a statement, B'nai Brith Canada decried the move, saying it's "unbelievable" and an "insult" to Holocaust survivors, and called on the government to reinstate the visits.

Ministry sources admit the new policy on the Golan is tied to Israel's willingness to withdraw from the region.

While there seems to be agreement that visitors usually return from the Golan impressed with the security value of the area, some sources say the move is a way to blunt lobbying against Israeli government compromises.

The Golan Residents Committee expressed shock over Beilin's new orders. The committee said that despite the move, it would find ways to bring visitors to the Golan Heights.

Air Canada to fly to Israel

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The skies over Tel Aviv just got a little more crowded.

Late last week, Air Canada, the country's largest airline, announced it will inaugurate twice weekly, year-round flights from Toronto to Israel beginning June 20.

The move is expected to put added pressure on El Al, Israel's national airline, because of new competition on the Canada to Israel route.

Earlier, Sunquest Vacations Ltd. announced it too will offer flights from Toronto to the Jewish state from May to October.

Air Canada's decision to fly to Israel was based on a number of international developments, said Kym Robertson, the airlines's manager of corporate communications for central Canada.

"The market has come back in air travel," she said, citing recently inaugurated and lucrative services to India, Korea and Japan. In addition, the prospect of free trade with Israel and the recent moves towards peace have "made it a good time to go in there."

Air Canada will fly its Boeing 767-300 extended range aircraft to Israel, configured to include business class seating. That reflects the success of Air Canada's "executive first service," which offers first class service at business class prices.

With the potential for growth in business links between Israel and Canada, Air Canada forecasts a market in business travellers, in addition to its leisure market, Robertson said.

Competition may force fares down

The aircraft also has the capacity to carry 15 tonnes of cargo, reflecting Air Canada's belief that trade, particularly hi-tech, will grow in the future, Robertson said.

Walter Arbib, director and CEO of Skylink, a wholesale ticketing company, said the addition of Air Canada and Sunquest to the Israel route will likely push down air fares even more. "They're going down now," he said. "El Al will have to sharpen their pencils."

Arbib suggested Air Canada might cut into El Al's U.S. business as well, with passengers from as far as Los Angeles flying to Israel through Toronto.

Air Canada's announcement will not affect Sunquest's decision to fly to Israel, said Jill Wykes, vice-president of corporate affairs for the charter company. However, Sunquest spokespersons have confirmed that Royal Airlines will not serve as Sunquest's carrier to Israel. The charter company is seeking another air carrier.

Holocaust education foe gets the axe

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

WASHINGTON — The rise and fall of the U.S. House of Representatives historian who opposed funding a Holocaust education program for not reflecting "the Nazi point of view" may well strengthen the hand of Holocaust education, advocates say.

And new Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich has garnered widespread support for his quick decision to dismiss Christina Jeffrey, who had opposed the curriculum, "Facing History and Ourselves," while serving as an Education Department consultant in 1986.

Gingrich fired Jeffrey, his handpicked choice for the post, last Monday, just hours after learning she had labeled the Holocaust curriculum biased.

"The program gives no evidence of balance or objectivity," Jeffrey wrote at the time.

"The Nazi point of view, however unpopular, is still a point of view and is not presented, nor is that of the Ku Klux Klan," she wrote.

In a letter to the speaker, the U.S.-based Anti-Defamation League (ADL) was among the first of many Jewish groups to praise Gingrich for his "swift and decisive action."

However, ADL national director Abraham Foxman sounded alarms that Jeffrey could have reached such an important position in Washington in the first place.

"That there are people who reach posts of such importance and influence underlines the need for Holocaust education," Foxman said.

Benjamin Meed, president of the American Gathering of Holocaust Survivors, agreed.

"More and more, this signals the need for proper Holocaust education," Meed said, noting that the Holocaust survivors' group currently has 435 teachers certified in its own Holocaust education program.

Meed also praised Gingrich for firing Jeffrey.

"We are very appreciative that the speaker acted so fast and understood that there is no place for giving ample time to the devil. And that's what she is," he said.

Rabbi Marvin Heir, associate dean of the Simon Wiesenthal Center agreed, saying, "There's only one place for her and that's out of the House of Representatives.

That Jeffrey slipped through the cracks has raised many eyebrows on Capitol Hill, in the White House and in the Jewish community.

"Someone did not do their homework," said Michael Berenbaum, project director at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

Gingrich met Jeffrey at Kennesaw State College in Georgia, where both were instructors.

A Gingrich spokesman said the speaker did not know Jeffrey's views on the Holocaust education program and fired her as soon as he found out about her remarks.

In a 1986 critique, Jeffrey said the Holocaust education program "may be appropriate for a limited religious audience, but not for wider distribution.

"It is a paradoxical and strange aspect of this program and the methods used to change the thinking of students is the same that Hitler and Goebbels used to propagandize the German people.

"This re-education method was perfected by Chairman Mao and now is being foisted on American children under the guise of understanding history," she wrote.

At the time, Education Department officials labeled her evaluation "appalling" and Jeffrey was removed from the list of teachers called on to evaluate curricula.

Jeffrey was quoted by The New York Times on Monday, saying, "It has never been my position that you ought to be going out and finding the KKK and bringing them into middle-school classrooms."

She also told the Times that she didn't "know anything about the Holocaust."

After being fired, Jeffrey charged in a written statement that she was the victim of "slanderous and outrageous" charges.

ASSOCIATED ... INTO THE 21ST CENTURY

ASSOCIATED HEBREW SCHOOLS has a storied history spanning almost 90 years. In 1907, Toronto's first Jewish communal educational enterprise, the Simcoe Street Talmud Torah launched a comprehensive innovative education program. The fundamental principles upon which that program was founded in 1907 remain the cornerstone at Associated today – a dynamic, traditional Jewish Studies curriculum, taught in Hebrew, complemented by an outstanding program of general studies.

Recognizing that Jewish education is vital to the survival and growth of the community, Associated maintained and continues to maintain a commitment that has become a guiding principle for Toronto's Jewish community – namely the promise that no child shall be denied a Jewish education because of an inability to pay.

In order to serve a growing Jewish community, expansion to Brunswick Avenue in 1924 was necessary. In 1957, after 50 years of continuous service to the Jewish community, the campus on Neptune Avenue was opened and Associated established itself as the community's single finest response to the challenge of Jewish Continuity.

ASSOCIATED continued to respond to the changing educational needs and demographic patterns of the community by building the Hurwich Centre (Finch Ave.) in 1971 and the Danilack Centre (Leslie St.) in 1983. Today, Associated stands firmly on the horizon of the year 2000 as one of the world's finest and best known Jewish day schools, rich in extra curricular activities and a program which fosters values of good citizenship, social conscience and commitment to the State of Israel.

ASSOCIATED HEBREW SCHOOLS is the largest Jewish day school of its kind in the world. The same uncompromising quest for excellence which launched the Talmud Torah in 1907, drives Associated's development in 1995. The result is a universally recognized first-class curriculum. This is complemented by a commitment to providing the very best facilities and support services.

ASSOCIATED provides a nurturing and caring environment – one in which each student is recognized as an individual and encouraged to achieve success according to his or her potential. Ultimately, the Associated student learns by more than books alone and in that way will be better able to confront the future.Tens of thousands of graduates of Associated have and continue to distinguish themselves through contributions to Canadian society and Jewish life as leaders in education, medicine, business, law and the arts.

As our community's children prepare to enter the 21st century, the challenges they face must be matched by an educational system having the maturity and depth to respond to the diversity of their needs. Associated Hebrew Schools is proud to augment its world class program with a new state-of-the-art facility in Thornhill designed to keep pace with the growing and changing needs of the community.

THE JACK AND BUSCHIE KAMIN EDUCATION CENTRE on Atkinson Avenue is strategically placed to complement the other campuses of the Associated system, serving an area where nearly 40% of the elementary age Jewish school children of greater Toronto reside. With this new campus, Associated renews its leadership role by setting the standard for quality and innovation. By boldly building in the footsteps of the community, Associated is now prepared to accommodate more than 3000 students on its four campuses.

JACK & BUSCHIE KAMIN EDUCATION CENTRE

December 12, 1994 - the leadership of Associated Hebrew Schools was advised that Mrs. Syra (Buschie) Kamin agreed to make a major contribution to Jewish education and to the future of the Jewish community.

In the spring of 1995, a magnificent, state-of-the-art facility will be dedicated in the heart of York Region and officially named the

JACK AND BUSCHIE KAMIN EDUCATION CENTRE

"SHE BRINGS GOODNESS AND NOT HARM..."

The youngest of 10 children born to Rose and Michael Stone, Syra Stone has been known throughout her life as "Buschie", a nickname derived from the word for kiss, given to her by her father. Michael built the House of Stone, one of Toronto's early clothing enterprises. One can only imagine his pride as he bounced his daughter on his knee, making her giggle while, playing Hashala, Bashala, Buschale. To him, she was like a kiss – gentle, filled with love and life.

Buschie was present at the founding of Toronto's Moshav Zekanim on Cecil Street. Later, her parents dedicated a room in the building and Buschie became the youngest member of what would become Baycrest. Her gift to the school is indicative of the cycle of life and her commitment to the community.

" SHE SMILES LOOKING AT THE FUTURE..."

Buschie excelled in general and Jewish studies, ever mindful of the bond between the two. Unlike many young women at the time, she was given the opportunity to study with the boys. Her parents and teachers believed that a Jewish education was a necessity.

Buschie also possessed natural athletic ability which earned her spots on local track, basketball, baseball and volleyball teams. Her achievements as an outstanding Jewish amateur athlete have been well documented.

"SHE RISES WHILE IT IS STILL NIGHT AND GIVES FOOD TO HER HOUSEHOLD.."

When she finished school, Buschie remained at home and cared for her parents. In their later years, they relied on her as she had on them. When her father died, Buschie comforted her mother when she needed it most.

In 1940, she married Jack L. Kamin and the newly-weds moved into her mother's house. There, in addition to taking care of the past, the new Kamins began a future of their own. First, a son Michael was born. Later, a daughter Ruth. Buschie cherishes life's opportunities to share time with her children and grandchildren.

Over the years, Mr. Kamin undertook a number of successful business ventures, each rime achieving his personal and professional goals. A manufacturer of fluorescent lights, in 1951 he was awarded the contract for subway and wire-way fittings for Toronto's new underground transit project. In 1953, he became one of the founders and the principal financial backer of Cadillac Construction, later known as Cadillac Fairview.

Together, Jack and Buschie were philanthropic, answering the many calls which came their way. In 1957, a classroom was dedicated in the new Associated campus on Neptune Avenue. Jack was completely dedicated to his family ard to his life partner, Buschie. In 1993, after more than 50 years of marriage, still a young man, Jack L. Kamin passed away.

"GIVE HER DUE CREDIT FOR HER ACHIEVEMENT..."

During the war years, Buschie's parents sponsored many new immigrants. She learned early on that no matter what she had, there were always those with less. Buschie Kamin continues to support the community and the State of Israel as a UJA Golden Giver.

A life member of Hadassah, she has assumed numerous leadership roles. In the presence of Eleanor Roosevelt, she addressed a crowd of 800 who had gathered in support of Youth Aliyah. In addition to being a Hadassah "Ima", she has worked tirelessly for Hadassim. As a symbol of her love, and dedication to Jewish children, a room in the Israeli youth village bears her name.

"WITH HER EARNINGS, SHE PLANTS A VINEYARD..."

In 1994, reflecting upon a life rich in blessings, Mrs. Buschie Kamin decided to plant a new vineyard in the community's garden. Her recognition that children are the future of our community will bear fruit as the next generation of Associated Hebrew Schools' students begins to build its intellectual and social foundation at the new Atkinson Campus in Thornhill.

With the 21st century on the horizon, we all recognize that our future is in the hands of our children. The Kamin gift will help plant the seeds of knowledge, ensuring our community's future success.

Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto is proud that Buschie Kamin has made an investment in Jewish Education, our most precious asset. She joins a long and distinguished list of supporters who appreciate Associated's vital role in ensuring the future of our Jewish community.

Associated is proud to have been "kissed" with her kindness and wishes to thank her sincerely. We pray that G-d will bless Buschie Kamin – her son Michael, a former student at Associated, his children Marc, Amy and Paul; her daughter Ruth, son-in-law Dr. Robert Chelin, a graduate of Associated and their son Loren, for whom she has set such a fine example – with good health and long life.

At Associated, the business of education is always on the upswing. Our mandate demands that we remain one step ahead, anticipating the requirements of the community, by continually strengthening our programs and improving our facilities. To do this effectively, Associated has embarked on a comprehensive development plan to help determine its financial destiny. Bold and aggressive, it is focused on ensuring that we will be able to provide an exciting environment for students today and tomorrow.

PROJECT HATZLACHA – Project Success is a program of giving opportunities which enables donors to make philanthropic investments in the future of Associated and the Jewish community.

PROJECT HATZLACHA has the goal of providing Associated with $10 million to be used as part of an integrated financial plan that will allow the school to meet the future needs of students at each of its campuses. Initial funds will be added to those already collected in support of the Kamin Education Centre. Additional funds will provide the means necessary to renovate the Hurwich and Danilack campuses and to redevelop the Neptune branch. A portion of this total will form the capital base of "THE ASSOCIATED", a new endowment development program responsive to contributors' desire to establish a dividend paying investment in the future of Jewish education in our community.

Donations, gifts and bequests to Project Hatzlacha will be applied directly to the educational, social and capital programs of Associated Hebrew Schools. A variety of giving, dedication and endowment opportunities are available and can be confidentially discussed with a representative of Associated.

ASSOCIATED HEBREW SCHOOLS OF TORONTO, an integral part of the community since the turn of the century, is more than a day school – it represents a powerful educational opportunity for a child to build skills and obtain knowledge. For our children and our children's children, the acquisition of knowledge leads to understanding and with understanding, the possibilities are infinite.

In a community overflowing with outstanding services, no one has done more and is poised to do more for the community than Associated Hebrew Schools.

Impact the future of your community by making a philanthropic investment in Jewish education at the Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto. Please contact Randy Spiegel at the Project Hatzlacha office - 416-789-7471.

The future of our children may be in our hands, but our future – the future of the community – rests in the hands of our children.

SUMMER FUN

Only at Moshava

Situated in the scenic Kawartha Lakes region of central Ontario, Camp Moshava provides the full range of sports activities, swimming, boating, hiking, nature study, arts and crafts, drama, shira, special programs and events.

Over the years, the camp has built some new buildings, developed some new programs, and put in enough water pipe to service a small city.

But in what the camp is really about, we haven't changed much.

We still assemble and train a staff of exceptional young men and women to work with our campers in a warm, supportive Orthodox Zionist environment. We still see our goal as fostering a commitment to the B'nai Akiva principles of love of G-d, love of Torah, and love of Israel. What is really unique, really important about Camp Moshava goes beyond facilities and events and personalities. And that won't change because we won't let it change.

This year, we hope to bring a little of the Camp Moshava spirit into the city by holding a Camp Moshava Shabbaton March 3rd and 4th, and a concert on Motzei Shabbat, March 4th, presenting BEAT'ACHON, an acclaimed group singing a cappella Jewish music.

We hope that the weekend will be a successful model for other programs in the future. We would like to think that it may help us find new ways for Camp Moshava to be Camp Moshava.

ComputerPals
Where Learning is Fun!

The ComputerPals Summer Day Camp Program offers a fun-filled mixture of computers and outdoor sporting activities. The tennis and baseball supervisors are experienced and qualified instructors. The atmosphere encourages cooperative interaction with peers. The computer activities are mentally stimulating and enriching and the sporting activities provide healthy and safe physical exercise.

On-Going Programs

The mission of ComputerPals is to extend children's computer literacy in a stimulating, fun-filled environment. the extensive range of computer software and expertise of the instructors provide the basis for an excellent enrichment program. The teachers at ComputerPals are mature, highly experienced instructors because, as Ray Catzel says, they have the patience to teach constructively, providing encouragement to the pupil, whatever their natural computing talent. Students are grouped according to age and skill level. As the child develops proficiency, they can move to the next level with some youngsters now expanding their skills to encompass areas like programming, animation, spreadsheeting and even robotics.

For further information, call Ray Catzel at (416) 490-9698.

Create a memorable summer

Bayview Glen Day Camp has been "creating unforgettable summer memories" since 1962.

Centrally located at don Mills and York Mills, Bayview Glen Day Camp has an ideal campsite. When you walk through the front door, you enter a large air-conditioned building, for use during extremely hot or rainy days; when you exit the building through the back door you are in a magnificent green parkland with a baseball diamond, a soccer field and campfire area, all surrounded by 40 acres of Conservation Woodland with hiking trails and cookout areas.

We have a huge gymnasium, with skylights and removable sides. What a great way to bring the outdoors inside while still offering protection from the sun.

There is daily Red Cross swim instruction in the on-site heated pools, fresh lunches are prepared at the camp, and door to door transportation is provided using only small buses to decrease the amount of time spent in transit.

Campers are 2 to 13 years old and there is a staff training program for 14 and 15 year-olds. The program is from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. or from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. is offered for 2 or 3 year olds. There is also the option of an extended day until 6 p.m.

For further information or to arrange for a tour of the facilities, please call 449-7746.

MATCHPOINT: INTERNATIONAL JUNIOR TENNIS CAMP

Located at Gray Rocks resort in Mont Tremblant, Québec, it is a unique tennis camp that combines top rate tennis instruction with exciting social and recreational activities. Being situated in the Laurentian mountains on beautiful Lac Ouimet provides the perfect environment for an excellent summer camp experience.

The philosophy of Matchpoint is to meet the individual's needs, as a camper first and athlete second. Through a well balanced program created by internationally accredited Tennis Director Ripley Amell. Matchpoint uses a system of guided discovery and quality questioning to develop skills in tennis technique, child motivation, physical training, sportsmanship, and goal setting. To achieve these goals, Matchpoint uses only qualified, friendly and sincere instructors to ensure that all campers have a positive camp experience.

In addition to daily tennis instruction, Matchpoint offers diverse social and recreational programs that guarantee fun, excitement and the opportunity for campers to make friends from around the world. Facilities include: 22 Har-Tru courts, a complete marina, a beach, an outdoor swimming pool, basketball court, riding stables, a golf course, driving range, mountain biking and hiking trails.

Campers are aged 10-18 and all sessions are for two weeks, running from June 25 to August 19. For more information contact Ripley Amell at Matchpoint:

Camp Ramah is set to inspire today's youth

Camp Ramah, located on Skeleton Lake in Muskoka offers a quality camping program in the framework of traditional Jewish practice. Under the directorship of Rabbi Mitch Cohen, Ramah offers a wide range of activities to children ages 9-16 finishing grades 3-10.

Ramah offers a full range of activities for campers. Our exciting water front activities are provided by certified staff and our safe and exciting program is a highlight for our campers. Daily basic and advanced instruction are offered in water skiing, sailing, swimming, tripping, windsurfing, canoeing and kayaking. Sports is an integral part of every campers development, focusing on skills, teamwork, and sportsmanship. Arts activities allow each camper to realize their creative potential through projects, performances, and individualized instruction. Outdoors programs take full advantage of the camp's beautiful setting while raising our camper's environmental awareness, appreciation of nature, and camping and scouting skills.

Judaica is a regular part of the camp day. Hebrew language and Jewish texts are taught by young adults in an informal setting. Hebrew is spoken, heard and learned at camp. For most campers comprehension of Hebrew becomes second nature. Shabbat, prayer, and ritual observance assumes a new dimension when they are experienced in a setting of natural beauty and shared creatively with friends. Israel becomes closer to our campers through music, dance, and personal contacts with Israeli staff.

Tikvah means "hope." Ramah now offers a unique one month program for campers with special needs. The Tikvah program gives adolescents ages 12-17 an opportunity to enjoy all of the camp activities and also explore their own Jewish identity in the Ramah environment. Additionally, Ramah offers Family Camp at the end of August; Taste of Ramah, a one week session for children in Grade 2; and annual days for Conservative Synagogue leadership and educators. Israel programs are also available for high school students.

Staff are often former campers who return to ramah because of the deep-rooted commitment to Ramah. Young people develop skills and leadership enduring friendships and a Jewish consciousness that helps them become vibrant members of their family and home community.

In the words of one Ramah parent, "Thank you for allowing my child to find her own individuality as well as the part of a lively Jewish community."

Creative computer camp for all levels

Young Einsteins presents an exciting opportunity for children to learn computer skills during the summer and get a head start on the school year.

Our computer camp will be held Monday to Friday, in the morning or afternoon, The camp begins by introducing important computer concepts and the basics of computing. From software applications including word processing, computer art, desktop publishing, charts, graphs and communications.

We also have a large stock of educational software to help children develop their basic knowledge in reading, writing, mathematics and logical reasoning.

At Young Einsteins, we believe that education can and should be fun.

A fun environment leads to increased concentration and a genuine enthusiasm for learning that stays with children for the rest of their lives.

We offer computer classes at all levels, for children starting as young as 3! Our class sizes are small, so each child receives individual attention. At Young Einsteins, we remove the mystique surrounding the computer.

CAMP MAROMAC

A First Class Vacation Experience

Since 1968, Camp MaroMac has been a happy haven for 200 children. Set on the shore of Lac Quenouille near Ste. Agathe, the superb facilities offer a large range of water and land sports, as well as arts, crafts, drama and excursions in a secure, healthy environment. A resident doctor and registered nurse assist in camper care.

Camp MaroMac is rated very highly by L'Association des Camps du Quebec, which, after its recent in depth assessment, reported. "The team of Marovitchs (Joseph, Esther and Syd) and (Marvin) Helfenbaum complement each other, form a true team of dedicated professionals and leave no stone unturned in their efforts to provide a safe, secure and fun-filled experience for their campers... The staff is mature, well trained, many being university students or graduates. Medical facilities far exceed the norms required by any camping group or government body... Camp MaroMac has a reputation in the camping community for offering high-quality camping services in an extremely safe and secure setting."

Hashomer Hatzair / Camp Shomria

Camp Shomria offers a dynamic and exciting summer camp experience for youth aged 8-16 from Canada and the United States. A variety of challenging sports, theme days, educational and cultural activities, create an atmosphere designed to build life-long friendships. It is located on Otty Lake on a beautiful waterfront ideal for a wide selection of fun-filled water activities.

Camp Shomria promotes deep love for Israel and the North American Jewish community. It is run by the Hashomer Hatzair Youth Movement, established over 80 years ago, and is active within the Jewish community. There are weekly activities available throughout the school year in Toronto and a 6-day residential winter camp during the school break.

Camp Shomria activities include dance, crafts, drama, hikes, trips (please see directory). Grade 10 graduates participate in a special program leadership called Yedid Plus, which includes an intensive five-week itinerary in Israel.

The staff are dedicated, committed to the camp and the campers, and most were Shomria campers. Camp Shomria has its own full-time registered nurse, and many staff members are trained in first aid. An excellent hospital with modern facilities is located just minutes away. To learn more about Camp Shomria, please call Tuvia or Miriam at 416-736-1339.

Camp Shalom Offers Lifelong Friendships

Camp Shalom has established its reputation for the past 47 years as a vibrant summer camp with a warm community atmosphere.

Friendships made at Camp Shalom last a lifetime. The camp has been owned and operated by the Toronto Zionist council since 1948 and is associated with Canadian Young Judaea, a Zionist youth movement.

"As a Zionist camp, most of our program is related to Israel, Jewish history and Jewish culture", says Steve Gillick, presently in his fourth year as Camp Director.

"We have a Camp Shalom Shabbat followed by an evening of drama presentations, Israeli singing and dancing. The campers always remember the Shabbat".

Set in Gravenhurst on Lake Muskoka, Shalom is less than two hours north of Toronto. The camp gives young people, ages 8 to 13 the opportunity to participate in more than 17 different activities during the day.

The program includes a ropes course with a zip line, canoe tripping, camping trips and baseball. Also available are self-defense, water skiing, canoe sailing, instructional swim, tennis, gymnastics, scouting, Jewish cooking and lots more!

Campers can also indulge in various arts activities, among them a well established drama program, newspaper and arts and crafts.

Steve Gillick says that "from day one, we speak about Hargashat Bayit, a feeling for the home. We talk about creating an atmosphere at camp that includes mutual respect, fair play, learning to get along, sharing ideals, and sharing fun and laughter".

At three-to-one, the staff to camper ratio at Shalom is high. Typically, 60% of the staff return from year to year.

Gillick says that one of the strengths of the camp is that many of the staff come out of the Young Judaea camp movement and were once campers themselves.

"They learn hadracha (leadership) and programming skills in the movement and bring this knowledge to Shalom".

1995 will mark the second year of Camp Shalom's "SNEAK PREVIEW" program, an 11-day program that allows first time campers to get a taste of life at a Jewish residential camp.

1995 will also mark Abe Levy's second year as Camp caterer. Abe proved last year that camp food need not taste institutional and in fact campers, staff and visiting parents raved about the taste and quality. The camp kitchen is Glatt kosher, supervised by the Kashruth Council, Federation of Greater Toronto.

Gillick says that as great as the 1994 session was, the 1995 season "will knock the campers socks off" with even more exciting evening programs, camp-wide programs and waterfront activities. "We have a lot of surprises in store", Gillick maintained "but we don't want to let the cat out of the bag yet".

Camp Shalom is an accredited member of the Ontario Camping Association.

Camp BB

1995 – THE SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE!

Camp B'nai Brith (CBB) of Ottawa is located approximately 50 kilometers west of Ottawa on the picturesque Ottawa River. Just off Highway 148, the camp can be found 3 kilometers east of Quyon, Que.

CBB serves Jewish youngsters from 7 to 16 years of age. Campers come from Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto as well as from other cities across Canada and the United States.

CBB is owned and operated by Ottawa B'nai Brith Lodge No. 885. The resident camp director and senior staff administer the camp season. They are assisted by a board of directors composed of lodge members plus representatives of other Ottawa B'nai Brith groups and the Ottawa Va'ad Ha'ir.

The camp offers two 31/2 week sessions and youngsters have the option of registering for one or both periods.

Bus transportation is provided for campers from Ottawa and Montreal. Children from other locations may make use of this service or they may opt to make alternative arrangements with the camp director.

Upon arrival, the campers will find that a typical cabin group is comprised of 10 to 12 campers, two counsellors and a specialist instructor. Everyone, except the youngest campers, sleep on bunkbeds – the top bunk features a protective rail. Toilets and showers are inside every cabin.

The services provided with the camp fee includes laundry, done every seven days. GST is included in the fee.

Visiting day takes place in the afternoon of the fourth Sunday, a few days before the end of the first session.

Parents, relatives and friends are invited to visit the camp, meet the staff and spend a couple of hours with their children.

A special program is offered to any child not having visitors.

T-shirts with the camp logo and unit photos are available at competitive rates; order forms are sent in the spring mailing.

For more information about CBB, call (613) 749-8817 or write the Director Allan Kathrelson at 52 Alexander St., Ottawa, Ont., K1M 1N2

A camp like no other

Manitou-Wabing Sports and Arts Centre, family owned and operated for 36 years, has gained it's reputation as the foremost Sports & Arts Centre in Canada and offers one of the most unique summer experiences around.

Manitou offers campers aged 8-17 quality instructional programs led by a faculty of professional directors, artists, teachers and coaches. Located on a beautiful 200 acre rustic campus on the shores of Lake Manitou-Wabing, just 150 miles North of Toronto... a place where kids can experience a camp like no other.

During their regular 7 week session campers participate in a variety of Sports & Arts. Campers may choose to concentrate or 'major' in particular activities, as well as, sample or 'minor' any number of other activities for various portions of the season.

An individual timetable is created for each camper made up of these 'majors' and 'minors' which makes for an exciting and enriching experience. Plus... during the 7 week season, campers at Manitou also get to enjoy all of the more conventional 'campy' things like: fun filled evening programs, camp fires and marshmallows, as well as, special all day camp programs and weekly dances.

Now, also available at Manitou are special one week sessions. Ideal for those kids who can't make it for the longer season, these one week sessions offer intensive programs designed especially for campers who want to focus on one particular activity.

Each camper, regardless of experience or ability level, has the opportunity to progress at their own pace with loads of individual attention and encouragement. Areas of specialization for the one week sessions include: Sports: Tennis (14 courts, 20 pros), Gymnastics, Waterskiing, Baseball, Golf, Basketball, Horseback Riding or Karate Arts: Visual Arts (Pottery, Drawing & Painting, Sculpture and Printmaking), Dance (Ballet, Jazz, Modern and Tap) or Theatre. Campers spend 6-8 hours daily nurturing and developing their skills in their chosen program while still having time to enjoy other recreational land and watersport activities, as well as, special nightly camp style evening programs.

Some of these one week programs, offered in June, are a great way for kids to gear-up for the coming summer season. While the August one week sessions, more and more, are being used as a great pre-season training week for kids getting ready to return to school team try-out or extra-curricular teams. But... no matter what your level of ability is, a one week program at Manitou is sure to give you a taste of what the Manitou experience is all about. For more information on one week sessions and longer programs, contact the Toronto office at (416) 922-2447.

Green Diamond Baseball Camp is a hit

Entering its ninth season of operation, Green Diamond is a baseball camp which operates for eight weeks in the summer. The camp offers a progressive program such that campers may come for two, four, six or even eight weeks. They can choose a full day of baseball, or divide the day equally between baseball and other counsellor-supervised programs such as arts crafts, field hockey and miniature golf. Every day there is a recreational swim.

Green Diamond is for children aged 5 to 14 and serves approximately 400 children each session. The baseball program is structured such that the fundamentals are stressed through hands-on individual instruction in each position. As a result of this, every child has the opportunity to develop their baseball skills according to individual ability, need and desire.

Rookie camp, for beginners aged five and six, consists of half a day of baseball and half a day of other activities, with one instructor for every four campers. At the level for children 11-14 years of age, there is a full day of baseball and there is one instructor for every ten campers. Instructors must have coaching and/or playing experience.

"We put the fun in fundamentals," says owner Michael Belz, who believes that instruction and having a good time should go hand in hand. Green Diamond combines the training of a baseball school with the fun of a summer camp.

Green Diamond has implemented a new program for 1995, The Baseball Institute. This program was set up to meet the needs of those campers who want a full day, very intensive baseball program. This program is for all star or rep baseball players.

Cito Gaston, who is now in his fifth year as director of baseball operations, has had a great deal of input in designing the program. There are six diamonds, each of different size, with a home-run fence at a different distance from home plate, so that every child has a chance to hit a home run. There are six batting cages with automatic pitching machines.

A Blue Jay visits the camp during every two-week session. Among those who have appeared are John Olerud, Devon White and Dave Stewart. There are also specialty weeks.

Besides excursions to Blue Jay games, there are out-of-town trips. In 1993 there was a weekend trip to Boston; campers will be visiting Cleveland in 1995, to see the new stadium.

Green Diamond is in the Bruce's Mill Conservation Area, off the Stouffville sideroad east of Highway 404. There is door-to-door busing. To prepare children for longer stays away from home, there are optional one-night sleepovers.

Creativity at Kidsworld

Kidsworld is in its 15th year of quality camping. Parents have been choosing Kidsworld for its creative programming for all these years.

Careful thought and much creativity go into the program. Every day something special is happening at the camp, from theme days to carnivals, olympics, professional entertainers and more. Specialty staff are hired to create unique activities in the areas of music, drama, art, kindergym and sports. Both fine and gross motor skills are developed throughout the summer.

Instructional swimming is one of the most important parts of the day. The campers are carefully supervised and they are taught the various skills for the Red Cross swim program.

Mrs. Rochelle Weinberg has directed the camp since its inception. She holds a Master of Education degree, an early childhood education diploma and has taught for 19 years.

She chooses only the most qualified staff through a careful screening process. This wonderful staff is one of the reasons the camp is so popular among parents. With door-to-door busing, hot lunches and snacks, instructional swimming and trips all included in the low price, parents have known for years that Kidsworld gives the most value for the best price!

Experience Israel with Masada

What is a Kibbutz? How can one lead a normal life 100 meters from a border? What was illegal aliyah?

These are just a sampling of the many questions that bothered David Fierer from Connecticut and Lauren Liebowitz from California until just a few months ago. Lauren and David joined over 600 young people from all over the United States and Canada that came to Israel last summer through Masada of the Z.O.A.

Along with six programs for High School (Adventure, Italy/Israel, touring, sports, scuba, and Kibbutz) we also offer four specially designed groups for college age students (Kibbutz, Scuba, Adventure and Touring) Each group has its own individual and special program. The Masada program is five and a half weeks with the exception of one of our collegiate programs which is four weeks. All of the groups visit the must see sections of Israel. This includes spending a week in Jerusalem, a week in the North, and week in the south, visiting Eilat, Tel Aviv and so much more.

The Masada program incorporates the very best elements of touring, education, Judaism and fun and gives them to you in 5 1/2 weeks. After 32 years of experience in the United States we are very happy to be offering our tours to Canadians for the second year. What a Combo! English Riding and Tennis

There is a great difference between just riding and learning to ride well! Now in its fourteenth season, The Hollows Camp plays host each summer to enthusiastic young riders from around the world. Both novice and experienced riders are assured of personal attention. Enrollment is limited to sixty children for each two week session and lessons are individually planned with a maximum of three students per riding instructor.

"While riding is the main reason that determines one's choice for attending The Hollows Camp, we believe that a well-rounded activity program is the best way to approach any sports discipline in a summer camp environment.", says Stephen Fine, who along with his wife Janet, are the camp's directors. As of last season the well-rounded approach included the addition of a outstanding tennis program along with the many other activities offered.

"Though our programs are only for children, it is not unusual for parents to ask if they can register for a camp program themselves after touring our facilities,: says Janet Fine. "We encourage all prospective campers and their families to take advantage of a personal tour before making their decision." Come and see for yourself what makes The Hollows Camp such a special place for so many. Contact Janet of Stephen Fine at (905)775-2694.

Kinneret's "First-Timers" eases transition to summer camping

Camp Kinneret (formerly Hagshama) has been a landmark of Jewish summer camping for over forty years. Thousands have spent their summers on the shores of beautiful Lac Mercier, near Mont Tremblant, where they have made lifetime friendships. Kinneret offers the full range of summer camp activities such as land and water sports, swim instruction, arts and crafts, drama, nature lore, jazz dance, newspaper, canoe tripping and much more.

What sets Kinneret apart, first of all, is it's small size which ensures a warm, family-like environment. Every camper receives individualized attention not only from the counsellors, but from everyone right up to the director. In addition, Kinneret does not just pay lip service to the idea of Jewish summer camping. Through the general ambience and through fun, informal programs, the camp reinforces pride in their Jewish heritage, with Israel as a focus. Last, but not least, Young Judaea activities in the city mean year-round continuity for those who want more than just a summer experience.

To ease the transition to summer camping for first-time campers, Kinneret runs a "Rishonim" (first-timers) program. Campers, aged 7 to 9, come for a week (July 30-August 7), during which they have their own staff and their own tailor-made program, but are integrated into the daily flow of camp life. Call the director, Tina Ornstein, at the camp office (735-3167 in Montreal or 1-800-426-5108) for more information today.

Shendy's Swim School

Eric Shendelman has been in the field of aquatics for 12 years. He has also done extensive work in camping, with 15 years' experience including positions as a program director and section head. Water safety, he insists, is vital; so, as he puts it, he "brings aquatics to camp". A well-trained staff in this field, he says, makes his school successful.

Shendy's instructors are in a three-to-one ratio to students. Shendelman says there are two keys to the child's learning success: personal attention to the student; and treating the parents as partners. Therefore, his instructors are always approachable, both to parents and children.

There are courses both in fitness and competitive swimming, though the emphasis is on fitness and water safety. Also, there are swimming programs for adults.

Instructors are experienced, with Red Cross and Royal Lifesaving certificates. The school offers regular staff training updates, including summer camp recertification courses for all camp staff, and also trains instructors for other camps and schools. Advanced leadership courses include Red Cross and Royal Lifesaving. Instructors' courses, National Life Guard Award, CPR, aquatic emergency care and Bronze courses.

Shendy's Swim School is a commercial member of the Ontario Camping Association. For more information, please call Eric Shendelman at (416) 784-0900.

Hillcrest: fun for youngsters

Centrally located in the beautiful, green Hoggs Hollow Valley at Yonge and York Mills. Our unique camp caters solely to the pre-school set ages 2'/2 to 5 years.

We provide an enriched, creative and nurturing environment while maintaining the highest safety standards.

A low camper/counselor ratio helps to ensure each child is made to feel comfortable and secure in what is often their first camp experience. Our staff is comprised of Hillcrest teachers, student teachers from the Early Childhood Education Program and mature, experienced counselors.

The rolling camp grounds and the adventure type playground provide a setting for exploration and fun. Our trained Red Cross swim staff are sensitive to new and experienced swimmers, providing your child with a feeling of security and confidence in the water.

In our arts and crafts program your child's imagination will blossom with our creative and stimulating "hands-on" experience. Music is one of the highlights at Hillcrest Day Camp. The music program is directed by our music specialist, Kayla.

Try something adventurous this summer

The Biking Expedition has been providing teenagers with adventure and fun for over twenty-three years. A value-centered program, TBE has always been at the forefront of exciting and innovative bicycle travel.

TBE has Road Touring and Mountain Bike trips for students 12 to 18 years old. Road tours range from a beginner Cape Cod tour to a challenge level Coast to Coast expedition. Mountain Biking is likewise graded, from our Introductory Mountain Bike New England to the ever popular Crested Hutte Fat Tire Festival trip. Bikers of all experience levels will find a trip that fits their needs.

Imagine riding your bike within sight of Mt. Denali in Alaska; biking your way leisurely around Nova Scotia; learning mountain biking in Acadia National park in Maine; or mountain biking trails like "Mr. Toad's Wild Ride" in Lake Tahoe, California.

Perhaps you can also conjure up images of yourself hiking on a glacier in the spectacular Canadian Rockies; white water rafting on the dramatic Arkansas river in Colorado; rock climbing at Seneca Rocks in West Virginia; or sailing aboard the Wendameen – restored 1912 schooner.

All of these adventures are possible with The Biking Expedition. Join us and have the summer of a lifetime. Call The Biking Expedition at 1-800-245-4649.

"MID-TOWN JEWEL"

Crestwood Valley Day Camp, located in a beautiful wooded valley of Bayview and Lawrence Avenues, brings children ages 3-10 close to nature while providing them with the comforts of home.

"We are fortunate to have such a fabulous site located right in the middle of town," says camp director Rochelle Wise.

Campers are encouraged to explore the valley in which the camp is located. Camper's are also introduced to nature through experience on the camp's own miniature farm, which features a vegetable garden and many animals including pigs, ducks, chickens and rabbits. "Our campers enjoy visiting the farm," says Wise. "It is exciting for the younger campers for whom the animals become such special friends."

The camp experience at Crestwood includes supervised arts and crafts (featuring a full pottery program), drama, dance, performance art, puppetry and various athletic activities. Pre-schoolers are offered a full sports programme including T-Ball, soccer and co-operative team games, helping them develop hand-eye coordination and motor skills. An exciting archery programme is always a favourite of the children. Tennis is available to older campers, as well as a challenging low-level ropes course.

Crestwood has a "very professional swimming programme", Wise says, explaining that campers take part in two swim sessions daily, one of which is recreational and the other which is instructional according to the Red Cross guidelines. "We overhire qualified swim staff," Wise says, "because we want to ensure that our campers have the best swim instructors available, with small instructor-camper ratios." Crestwood has five heated swimming pools on site, and has use of the olympic-sized pool at nearby Glendon College.

The computer Clinic is a favourite at Crestwood challenging campers with innovative programmes.

Crestwood's Baseball Training Camp encourages campers who have completed Grade 1 and up to take part in an intensive programme focusing on the development of skills and confidence, coached by experienced instructors. Campers in this programme enjoy baseball in the mornings and join the rest of the camp for regular activities for the afternoon.

All campers are encouraged to participate in an in-camp overnight which features a cook-out and a traditional campfire and sing-a-long.

Crestwood also introduces its campers to the joys of camping out. Campers completing Grade 2 and up have the option of participating in a four-day trip to an overnight camp.

Campers never long for the conveniences of home while they experience the great outdoors. They are provided with convenient door-to-door transportation and are served full catered nutritional lunches. Crestwood School's air-conditioned classrooms and modern gymnasium are available for inclement weather.

Wise adds that campers revel in "the cozy, family atmosphere" of Crestwood. "Our (160) staff members are very close, and very spirited, building lasting memories for our children."

Camp Schodack

This year, 1995 will mark Camp Schodack's thirty-ninth summer as a children's camp.

It is small, with a warm, family atmosphere where everyone knows everyone else, and most of the staff were once campers themselves. There are 110 boys and 110 girls, from seven to 15 years old. Once a week, kids can phone home.

While most campers come for the full summer, some stay for one month only in July or August. Set on 200 acres of playing fields and forest, Camp Schodack offers activities to suit any camper. Some of them include tennis, golf, Western riding, water skiing, street hockey, radio, rocketry and roller blading. There are also track and swim meets, and biking, hiking, rock climbing and canoe trips for kids with the urge to go exploring.

Among Camp Schodack's special features is the "color war", for two days in July and six in August. Campers are divided into two teams, green and white, which compete in various exciting and unusual events.

Camp Schodack's counselor in Training programs require one year for girls and two for boys. The boys' program includes a year as waiters who serve the camp meals.

For more information, call Lori Abramowitz or Paul Krouner at 1-800-851-1164.

Jordan on youth tour plan

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

Reflections between a rock and a hardplace.

TORONTO — Poland, the Czech Republic, Israel and Jordan are all on the itinerary of a forthcoming Anguish to Hope tour that four Canadian Jewish organizations are offering to about 100 Canadian university students from May 8 to 24, 1995.

Timed to mark the 50th anniversary of the formal surrender of Nazi Germany to the Allies, the 16-day tour is "the first ever Canadian mission going to Jordan," according to one of its organizers, Eli Rubenstein, director of the Young Leadership Division for the United Israel Appeal Canada.

Modeled after the March of the Living international student tour of Poland and Israel, the Anguish to Hope tour has added Prague and Theresienstadt to its European itinerary. "We recognize that many of the students may never go back to Eastern Europe, so we're giving them a couple more days," Rubenstein said.

The Israeli portion of the tour involves travel throughout the country, including two days of mystical observance of Lag B'Omer at Mount Meron, the burial place of kabbalistic author Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai.

The group is scheduled to meet with Israeli Arab students, Knesset members and top officials of the Jewish Agency.

A Holocaust survivor and a scholar-in-residence are set to accompany the group to provide personal and historical commentary as required, Rubenstein said. Anna Heilman, an Ottawa Holocaust survivor who accompanied the 1993 March of the Living mission, "heard the voices of her parents, telling her to thank the students for coming back and remembering, and never forgetting," he says.

Cost of the mission is $2,895, from anywhere in Canada, plus a minimum $100 contribution to one of three Jewish charities. Limited scholarships are available to students in need.

Sponsors are the United Jewish Appeal, the Canadian Jewish Congress, Canadian Jewish Federations and the Jewish Students Network.

Information sessions are planned for both Montreal and Toronto. The Montreal meeting takes place at the Federation Building, Jan. 25 at 7 p.m. For details, call Simon ben Simon, 514-345-2610.

The Toronto meeting takes place in the Lipa Green Building, Suite 415, Feb. 9 at 7:30 p.m. For details, contact Chaia Berkowitz, 416-631-5690.

Travel Talk

By Bill Gladstone

As historians debate whether Romania's 1989 violent insurrection was a true revolution or merely a coup d'etat in disguise, one Canadian who has visited the impoverished Eastern European nation claims that while its people enjoy more freedoms than before, they still wear faces of oppression.

"When I was in Romania in 1989, Ceausescu was still alive, and if anyone was found holding U.S. dollars, they were at great risk," says Torontonian Paul Pascal, a high school art teacher in Woodbridge who has visited Romania twice searching out his family roots. "Now you see foreign currency exchanges all over the place, especially in Bucharest." As well, Pascal noted a greater freedom of the press — allowing him, for instance, to buy an anti-Semitic newspaper openly in Bucharest.

About half the size of France, Romania's geography is dominated by the Carpathian Mountains and by the lowlands of the Danube River, which drains into the Black Sea. While acknowledging the beauty of the countryside, Pascal says he spent most of his time in archives and in visiting the towns of Iasi and Bacau in the northeastern province of Moldova.

After arriving on a relatively inexpensive but uncomfortable Tarom Airlines flight from New York, Pascal spent a couple of days in Bucharest, whose streets are lined with dreary post-1917, Communist-era architecture. Then he took an eight-hour train journey to Iasi (pronounced "Yash") on a ticket that cost 10,000 leu, or about $7 (US).

There he visited the Great Synagogue, a Jewish museum, cemetery and the state archives, outside of which his guide "had a long, frustrating exchange with a very unyielding, unsympathetic guard brandishing a rifle." For Pascal, the episode underlined the fact that Romania's national archives are still controlled by the secretive, paranoid ministry of internal affairs.

While in Romania, Pascal discovered there had been a class of Jews in Romania called Sudits; they were tolerated foreign nationals living under the protection of whatever country they had come from. Fearing civil unrest, Ottoman authorities had conducted a "catagraphy" or census of the Sudits in 1824-25. To his great dismay, however, Pascal was denied permission to examine more than a few sections of the catagraphy in Iasi.

In Bacau, Pascal found the grave of his grandfather's sister, and visited Jewish and public archives. As in most places, kosher food was easily available. An average meal, consisting of bread, chicken soup, meatballs in gravy and a hot cherry-filled bun, cost only about $3 (US).

"In Bucharest, Iasi and Bacau, there are kosher restaurants attached to the Jewish community centres, subsidized by the American Joint Distribution Committee," Pascal says. (All but 20,000 of Romania's post-war population of 400,000 Jews have emigrated to Israel, but those that remain belong to a tight-knit Jewish community supported by the Joint.)

Foreigners pay four times what locals pay for hotel rooms, but even so, rates are cheap. Pascal paid about $20 (US) per night at the Hotel Trainis in Iasi, and about $25 (US) at the Hotel Decabal in Bacau. As air-conditioning and windowscreens seem equally unheard of in Romania, he had to choose nightly between sweltering in an airless room in July or being swarmed by mosquitos.

After two weeks in Romania, he visited Belarus, a country where "the people seem much more self-assured, even if they're not so much better off economically." However, his journey was interrupted at the train station in Zlobin when heavily-armed robbers took over part of the train; they were eventually subdued by police, but only after a shootout in which a bystander was killed.

Jewish museum planned for Morocco

By ELIAS LEVY
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The first Jewish museum in the Arab world will be opened this spring.

This is an important first in the history of Jewish-Muslim relations, according to Albert Weizman, one of the principal designers of the project. Weizman made the announcement during his recent stay in Montreal.

The former Montrealer is currently the director of the American Joint Distribution Committee office in Morocco. He outlined the project to a group of community leaders.

The museum will house historic religious objects and treasures of the Jewish community of Morocco. It will be established in a building that once served as an orphanage.

"The Celia Levy de Bengio orphanage closed in the late '60s. The building then housed a yeshivah, but because there were not enough students, the religious establishment was forced to close at the end of 1990.

"The leaders of the Jewish community of Casablanca gave us the green light to begin converting the building, with a view to founding the first Jewish museum in Islamic territory," Weizman said.

A working committee of three volunteers — Albert Weizman, who is involved in the project on a personal basis; Elias Harris, the official delegate of the Alliance Israélite universelle in Morocco; and Simon Levy, general secretary of the Jewish communities of Morocco — have undertaken the responsibility of carrying out the project.

According to Weizman, the leaders of the Moroccan Jewish community are very enthusiastic about it. "The museum will enable new generations of young Muslim Moroccans to discover the many rich facets of the cultural inheritance bequeathed by the Jews of Morocco."

The approximate cost of the project will be $50,000 (US), he said.

"The funds will come primarily from the Jewish community of Morocco and, we hope, from other Jewish communities in the Diaspora, as well as from private philanthropic institutions," said Weizman.

"Until now, the only museum exhibiting the treasures of the precious cultural and spiritual heritage of Moroccan Jews is in Jerusalem," he said.

Judean Desert rich in biblical history

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

MT. MONTAR — It is clear, sunny and temperate, a perfect day for a tour of the fabled Judean Desert by jeep.

Next to walking, this is the best way of exploring a region rich in biblical history and scenery. Unfortunately, relatively few tourists bother with the Judean Desert. It is truly their loss.

On this day in late November, my Bedouin guide Izzat Abu-Rabia and I are sitting on the rounded peak of Jebel-El-Montar, or Mt. Montar, 524 metres above sea level.

We are enjoying a breakfast of sweet tea and a sesame roll, which we dip into za'atar, a heady Middle Eastern spice.

As we munch, we look around and admire the panoramic views — the tan, furrowed hills of the arid Hurequanya Valley, the hazy outline of the Dead Sea, and the towering wall of the Moab Mountains across the border in Jordan.

There are other sights — a Bedouin encampment, with its system of canals and cisterns in the folds of a gully, and flocks of black sheep grazing happily on shoots of grass, their bells tinkling merrily.

From our vantage point, we can also see two settlements: Kedar, with its cluster of red tile roofs, and Ma'ale Adumim, a mass of white, buildings huddled on two hilltops. To the west, 14 kilometres as the crow flies, the skyline of Jerusalem seems sparse. On the other side is Jericho, lying peacefully on a green plain.

After breakfast, we climb back into the jeep, a sturdy all-terrain vehicle which Izzat, an expert driver, has handled with aplomb since we set out from Jaffa early in the morning.

We reach the Mar Saba monastery, near Bethlehem. It suddenly appears, like a mirage. It is the oldest and biggest monastery in the Judean Desert, clinging to the walls of the precipitous Kidron Valley.

The tan buildings, with their blue cupolas, resemble a movie set. Since we're on the opposite side of the canyon, Mar Saba is off-limits to us. But the mere sight of it is enough.

Izzat, a Negev Bedouin, drives to Nebi Musa, an observatory which offers pastoral vistas of Jericho, the Jordan Valley, Kibbutz Almog and the northern end of the Dead Sea.

We descend into the valley. The Dead Sea shimmers in the haze, a mysterious body of mineral-laden water.

We drive along the shoreline, past the Qumram caves, where the Dead Sea scrolls were discovered by an Arab shepherd.

We pull into Ein Gedi, which is renowned for its nature reserve and spa. The biggest oasis on the western side of the Dead Sea, Ein Gedi is also renowned for its many varieties of flora and fauna.

The path which leads to the waterfall, where David is said to have taken refuge after running away from Saul, is scented with the perfume of exotic bushes and flowers.

We end our outing of the Judean Desert in Ein Bokek, a hot springs just beyond the historic fortress of Massada. Without a doubt, it has been a fine, pleasurable day.

Unvarnished memoirs of wartime

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Endre Klein, a retired businessman who was born in Romania in 1922 and who came to Canada in 1946, has written Survival of A Victim, an unvarnished memoir of his wartime experiences.

The only member of his extended family to survive the war, Klein tells a story that, despite the passage of half a century, is still as sharp as a serpent's tooth. There is a rawness on every page, a pointedness that attests again and again to man's inhumanity.

The book presents almost 300 pages of graphic first-person accounts of fighting in the underground partisan army, surviving in labor and concentration camps, grim humor in the crematoria, and encounters with such diverse wartime figures as a hungry rabbi who steals bacon and demonic Nazi stormtroppers.

Klein's raw prose adequately conveys the rawness of life during the war, which seemed at times to be as much a struggle against hunger as it was a struggle against the Nazis. The witness of multiple atrocities from gang rape to mass murder, he shares the motivation of most writers of Holocaust memoirs — to urge the present generation to pick up "the torch of justice and humanity."

Published by Sharon Express Printing, the book is available by writing 2468 Eglinton Ave. W., Suite 707, Toronto M6M 5E2.

King David, the Controversy: As reported in this space several weeks ago, composer Alen Menken and lyricist Tim Rice, who won Academy Awards for their score of Walt Disney's animated movie Aladdin, have begun writing King David, a musical theatrical extravaganza based on the life of ancient Israel's famed second king.

The production is scheduled to debut in Jerusalem in 1996 to mark that city's 3,000th anniversary. Additional performances are scheduled for other cities in Israel and some 22 cities worldwide, including Paris, London, New York, Tokyo and Moscow.

However, the proposed musical has apparently sparked some controversy. According to the Israeli fortnightly newsmagazine The Jerusalem Report, ultra-Orthodox members of Jerusalem City Council have announced their opposition to the production, fearing it will depict the relationship between David and Jonathan as more than just an intimate friendship.

"King David will be the most spectacular and dramatic production ever staged, as well as conveying a message of inspiration, hope and peace to the world," counters its producer, Andre Djaoui.

Israeli Pianist in North York: Born in Tashkent in the former Soviet Union, Yefim Bronfman emigrated to Israel with his family in 1973, and made his international musical debut two years later with Zubin Mehta and the Montreal Symphony.

The talented virtuoso pianist, who has recorded numerous classical albums (two with violinist Isaac Stern) on the Sony label, appears with cellist Lynn Harrell Jan. 27 in the Recital Hall of the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts. Program features works by DeBussy, Beethoven and Rachmaninoff. 416-733-9388.

A Film On The Gypsies: The nomadic tribe known as the Sind people, or the Gypsies, have journeyed from India through Egypt, Turkey, Romania, Hungary, Slovakia, France and Spain, encountering persecution at nearly every turn. Latcho Drom, a film by Tony Gatlif that won a prize at the Cannes Film Festival in 1993, traces the historical path of this vibrantly musical and relentlessly wandering people. Opens Jan. 27 at the Bloor Cinema in Toronto.

Toronto Jewish Folk Choir: This sonorous organization under the direction of Esther Ghan Firestone is preparing a varied program for its annual spring concert, set for May 7. Works include a chassidic medley, the Heifetz folk cantata Ich Bin A Yid and compositions by Canadian-Jewish composers Milton Barnes and Louis Appelbaum.

Singers in all ranges, especially tenors, with some music-reading ability, are invited to join the choir, which meets Wednesdays at 7.30 p.m. at the Winchevsky Centre, 585 Cranbrooke Ave., Toronto. Call Sharon at 416-756-7865 or Jean at 416-489-7681.

Art Exhibits Around Town: Toronto artist Sandra Silberzweig, whose colorful semi-abstract works sometimes depict Judaic themes, has organized a first solo exhibition. About 17 of her works, on paper in mixed media, are to be displayed Jan. 29 to Mar. 5 in the Wallin Lounge of the Bloor St. JCC, 750 Spadina Ave. Opening reception Jan. 29 at 3 p.m.

A photography exhibition by Adrian Szasz, entitled Amazing Woods and Flowers, is on view at Cafe Des Arts, 80 Spadina Ave., Suite 315, until Feb. 4. The Romanian-born camera artist, whose works have been displayed in some two dozen countries, has focused his lens on peculiar shapes of tree branches found in Canada, Israel, Europe and the United States. "I hope the photographs will make the viewer aware of various ways to see nature, and maybe make them like it even better," Szasz explains.

Long interested in tiny compositions from Celtic manuscripts to Japanese bonsai gardens, Montreal-born artist Fred Herscovitch is presenting a series of small drawings of tulip bulbs, sea shells and other objects. Collectively, the show is called Miniatures, and remains on view throughout January at the Annex Art Centre, 1073 Bathurst St.

The Sculpture of Georges Jeanclos opens Mar. 1 at the George R. Gardiner Museum of Ceramic Art, and features some 20 terracotta pieces, including figures from the artist's wartime childhood experience. As a 10-year-old French Jew, Jeanclos fled with his family into the forests of southern France. Until August 8.

Film looks at single mothers

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Canadian documentary film Ms. Conceptions had its beginnings when co-producers Ric Esther Bienstock and Linda Frum one day found themselves discussing over coffee at what point they would abandon their search for the perfect mate and go ahead and have children anyway.

For Bienstock, the ease with which two thirtysomething women from traditional Jewish backgrounds could consider single motherhood was surprising.

"It didn't seem like a huge decision to make," said Bienstock, 35, director of the $400,000 film. "I began to wonder, when did it become so easy to say?"

It was anything but easy, however, for the women profiled in Ms. Conceptions, a one-hour film airing Jan. 24 at 8 p.m. on CBC's Witness.

Educated, financially secure, all pushed by the ticking of biological clocks, they talk about how single motherhood had become an option only after disappointing attempts to find a husband.

The film shows how easily they could be your co-worker, sister, friend or daughter.

It also shows the diversity of reactions to this growing social phenomenon.

We hear David Blankenhorn, president of the Institute for American Values, compare fatherless children to one-armed baseball players: sure, they can play in the major leagues, but having two arms is a definite advantage.

For some, single motherhood is not so much an affront to traditional values as the result of unrealistic expectations. Says British writer Claire Rayner in the film: "If a woman is unable to make the right sort of relationship with a man, within which she can build a family and look after children properly, I say 'Hard luck, love. That's the way the cookie crumbles. You can't have it all.' "

Rabbi Mark Dratch of Toronto's Orthodox Shaarei Shomayim synagogue told The CJN that while he's concerned about the threat to the Jewish family posed by single motherhood, he doesn't believe couples should have unhappy marriages just to have children.

"It's a conflict between human need and the demands of [Jewish] law," he said.

Single mother by choice, from Ms. Conceptions.

Bienstock said she herself was "torn" between the two camps, which has made for a balanced and thought-provoking film. It is also achingly intimate, with participants sharing their visits to fertility clinics, sperm banks and prenatal examinations.

"As a woman, do you deny yourself?," Bienstock asked from the Toronto office where she is planning her next major project — her wedding. "Is it bad to bring a child into this world [outside of a marriage]? It's a hard call."

The Oxford Illustrated History Of Western Philosophy, edited by Anthony Kenny (Oxford University Press, $51.95)
The Illustrated World's Religions, by Huston Smith (Oxford University Press, $40)

The study of philosophy has been described in many ways. Someone suggested that a philosopher is a blind man in a dark room looking for a black cat that isn't there. Will Durant maintained that it is good for a philospher to remind himself, now and then, that he is a particle pontificating on infinity. For H.L. Mencken metaphysics was almost an attempt to prove the incredible by an appeal to the unintelligible.

In the handsome Oxford history, six distinguished scholars tell the story of Western philosophy from its ancient beginnings to the present day. They discuss the major ideas and contributions of a galaxy of thinkers from Plato and Aristotle, to Locke, Hume and Kant, to Russell, Sartre and Wittigenstein.

What is unusual about this work are the 150 illustrations, including 16 pages of full color. How can illustrations reflect abstract or complex philosophical ideas? For the most part they don't. But the ingenious juxtaposition of ideas and works of art often do illuminate the contents and concerns of the text.

Undoubtedly, the greatest Jewish philosopher — at least in the West — was Baruch Spinoza (1632-77). He was born into a Spanish speaking Jewish family living in Amsterdam and was reared as an Orthodox Jew. But he rejected Jewish tradition and theology. Fearing repercussions from the Christian community, the rabbis offered him a bribe to keep silent. This he refused and at the age of 24, he was excommunicated and expelled from the synagogue.

Spinoza identified God with nature. This doctrine goes beyond anything that is found in the Jewish tradition, except possibly among the Kabbalists.

The philosophical basis for fascism is examined in a perceptive essay which exonerates Nietzsche of responsibility. Despite his detestation of the masses, he was neither a nationalist nor an anti-Semite. "His elite heroes and supermen are conceived in cultural not political terms."

Oswald Spengler (1880-1936) was pessimistic about the future of Western civilization. He maintained that cultures go through phases of vigorous youth, productive maturity, cultivated decline and final collapse. For him the Western world was in decline as people deserted the countryside for vast cities and became a rootless proletariat easily manipulated by demagogues and as "heroic virtue is replaced by sensualism, art becomes corrupted and esoteric and religious faith is undermined by scepticism."

All in all this is a prescient account of our present condition which is made even worse by Oswald's conviction that a moribund West will eventually be overwhelmed by the "races" of the rest of the world.

This work, often quite difficult, is fine for browsing, reference and for close and careful perusal.

The Illustrated World Religions is an oversized, beautifully illustrated guide, the outgrowth of a successful television series. The author, well known for his previous books on comparative religion, has produced another thoroughly researched, informative and pictorial representation of Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism, Islam, Judaism and Christianity.

The depiction of Judaism is sympathetic and knowledgeable and revolves around the concept of meaning — in history, morality, justice, suffering, the hallowing of life, revelation and the birth of Israel.

The author concludes his discussion of Judaism eloquently. "The star of David waves over their spiritual homeland. The dominant thought in the minds of the Jew is, am Yisrael chai, Israel lives! How wonderful to be living when all this is happening."

Israel to slash budget

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Israeli Finance Minister Avraham Shohat last week announced an economic plan to slash the government budget by over $233 million (US) and to boost the net wages of all Israeli workers.

The plan came in response to fears that workers would see a decline in their wages as a result of a new health tax that took effect this month.

Shohat said 90 per cent of the country's wage earners would see an increase in their net salaries next month. He said the cuts in the budget would come in part as a result of reduced income taxes for working women. He also said the budget cuts would not affect services to citizens.

Opposition members dismissed the reforms, saying they were not serious.

In other economic news, economic growth in Israel will be slower in 1995 than it was last year, according to an internal document prepared by the research department at the Bank of Israel.

While the economy expanded by seven per cent in 1994, officials at the bank estimate that growth in 1995 will be in the 4.5 to five per cent range.

Citing the slowdown in overall growth, bank officials also predicted that unemployment would rise in 1995 to 8.2 per cent from 7.6 per cent in 1994.

Wunch says goodbye to shmatte biz

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Milton Wunch always did business the old-fashioned way, like the day in 1975 when he and brother Irving sold their sportswear firm.

"There were no papers, no lawyers and no accountants," said Bob Patel, who with Nagin Patel bought Style-Kraft Sportswear Ltd. with $10,000 down and a handshake.

"Later, our accountant got worried and said we had to have something in writing," Patel said. "[When] I finally asked Milton, without hesitation he picked up a scrap of paper from his desk and wrote out a promissary note for $10,000."

Now 75, Milton Wunch has retired after working for the Patels for 19 years. They honored him at a recent party. Irving, 84, retired from the company in 1976.

"We'll miss Milton," said Bob Patel. "He was a link to our long-time customers." Their accountant still has the $10,000 promissary note framed on his wall.

The Patels, who are unrelated, have increased 10-fold the business started by the Wunch brothers during the war in a Rusholme Crescent basement.

Style-Kraft, now located in Mississauga, is one of Canada's largest suppliers of men's outerwear jackets.

Irving started Style-Kraft while holding down another job, waiting for the end of World War II so Milt, then serving with the RCAF overseas, could join the business.

They moved to a College Street storefront, where thieves looted every garment, and throughout Toronto's garment district, eventually settling on King Street near Spadina Avenue in 1960.

At one time, Style-Kraft had 250 employees making jackets. One of them, Masoa Okashi, a Japanese teen hired by the Wunches after he was displaced from his British Columbian home during the war, still works for the firm doing repairs.

Milton Wunch recalled that prior to the sale, 90 per cent of the jackets were made in Canada. Today, almost all the stock is imported.

"The Patels were open to new ideas," he said. "They introduced a revolutionary method of vacuum packing cloth that speeded up production and saved time and space. They expanded the business and are now doing 85 per cent with chains and 15 per cent with independents. They've added a lot of new lines."

Anber
Moving & Storage

Advertiser's Corner

By ELAINE COHEN

MONTREAL — Six years ago, ship chandler Steve Anber supplemented his income by moving a student to Toronto. After charging $300 to transport furniture from a studio apartment, he cleared $100.

The 30-year-old founder of Anber Moving & Storage has been on the move ever since. Today that same job would cost $800.

Anber is a member of Excellent Van Lines, a corporation of Canadian Movers. "We're associated with National and between us we average 14 vehicles on the road."

National has their own storage. A 5'x 7' storage space holds 20 boxes, a bed, a couch and a desk. For under $60 a month, goods are protected from fire, theft and damage.

The company contracts local moves throughout the province and long distance moves to Toronto, Vancouver, New York and Florida. Ninety per cent of the business is residential; 10 per cent is commercial.

Anber's warehouse is located at 8400 Mountain Sights. Family members Graham, 28, Debbie, 32, and their mother Shirley work out of an office on De Vimy. Steve is involved in the physical road work, while Graham takes charge of estimates and coordinates the moves.

June to August is their busy season. Sixty-five per cent of the moving takes place in these months and the closer to July 1, the higher the rates. Off-season Anber charges $75 per hour for four men and by June 27 rates soar to $110.

Anber. "Beware of fly-by-nighters, who take advantage of consumers during the rush season. Ask to see permits because it's illegal to do business without them."

Experienced movers know how to pack trucks safely, lift furniture out of the door, wrap it in blankets and even protect sensitive areas.

Since January 1994, Anber made 36 trips to New York. "We serve a lot of clients in the Orthodox Jewish community."

He observes a small percentage of career seekers moving back from Vancouver. "This boom is over out west and the cost of living is cheaper in Montreal."

Anber is hesitant about recommending the moving business. "For us, it's an honest family business," he says, adding it takes hard work to make a small profit.

Revenues dip in the winter but costs are the same. The company must spread summer earnings to cover year round expenses. The company lays out U.S. dollars for lodging, food and safe parking in the United States.

"With our mother's guidance, everything fell into place slowly and we're happy just to make a nice living," he says.

Guidance

Last year 150,000 people moved the last week of June.

Movers must follow government guidelines to travel between provinces and throughout the United States.

"Half our calls are referrals and that's the way it should be," says

RUTH HALPERIN

As we move into 1995, I want to take this opportunity to thank all of my past and present clients for your continued support. I am delighted to have been able to help so many of you with your real estate transactions.

It is so rewarding for me to be able to enlarge my circle of friends year after year. Your loyalty, referrals and confidence have helped me to achieve the honour of

#1 AGENT at ReMax Ultimate for 1994.

It is especially fulfilling to do work that I love, and I look forward to continuing to enlarge my circle.

Thank You,

Ruth

'They were so young'

Bombings stun Israelis

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

TEL AVIV — Fearful. Angry. Powerless. Humiliated.

That is how many Israelis said they felt on the morning after the Netanya suicide bomb attack that left at least 19 dead and more than 60 wounded.

"You don't know whose turn it's going to be next," says Yaffa, transfixed by the 19 faces splashed across the front page of a Hebrew newspaper. "They were so young. When I look at their faces I feel stricken. And afraid."

"Dizengoff Street. Afula. Netanya. It can happen anywhere," says Lior Avni. "You have to watch every step you take. You're not safe anywhere."

Yaffa, who owns a snack bar in Tel Aviv, says she feels her blood boil when she thinks of the terrorists who did this. "And what do we do about it? Nothing. We should show them that they'll pay a price for this. We should blow up their villages, their families."

Please see Editorial page 8

A customer, who has just walked in, agrees. "They murder innocent people in the heart of Israel and we do nothing. We're supposed to have a strong army – one of the best in the world. So we're told," he laughs bitterly. "They are making fools out of us. It's humiliating."

Calls for bloodshed have come not only from isolated hotheads, but from mainstream "respected" Israelis like columnist and broadcaster Tommy Lapid. "Wouldn't they think twice about such acts if we were to plant car bombs in Nablus and Ramallah and Hebron?" he asked during a Sunday night talk show.

Not all Israelis support such tactics. "We're a state, not a band of terrorists," says Avni, a business administration student in Tel Aviv.

Editorial: Fifty years ago in Auschwitz

Auschwitz was the Nazis' largest concentration and extermination camp. But even as the term "extermination camp" is written down on paper, the ability to understand what it truly was is diminished.

Somewhere in the unarticulated silences of our minds, in the dark untraveled spaces of imagination, in a survivor's unaverted glance, or in the tearful, heart-breaking detail of an old, perhaps frayed, black-and-white photograph, we will find the meaning of Auschwitz.

But those are places we, the next generation, and all generations hereafter cannot truly visit. And it is a meaning we will never fully grasp.

That is why anniversaries are important. They take us to the edge, but no further, of where our minds, our hearts and our souls can travel.

Fifty years have passed since the gates to that hellish place were opened by the Red Army. When they entered Birkenau on Jan. 27, they found in the six remaining storehouses – the other 29 had been burned to the ground by the fleeing SS – 836,255 women's dresses, 348,000 men's suits and 38,000 pairs of men's shoes.

That all these articles of clothing had once belonged to people and been worn by people and been treasured by people is unabsorbable as fact by the human mind, it being buried in an abstraction of very large numbers.

Mass murdering of the inmates, almost all of them Jews, by gas began in January 1942. The gas chambers and crematoria had a combined capacity of burning 4,456 corpses each day. Eventually the crematoria broke down from overuse. The corpses were then buried in pits – although the use of the term "corpses" prevents us from truly grasping and understanding that these "corpses" were once human beings.

No one knows for certain exactly how many human beings were killed in Auschwitz-Birkenau. We do know that more than one million Jews died there, including tens of thousands of children. In fact, 7,650 prisoners were freed by the Soviets on Jan. 27, 1945. Only 120 children lived to be liberated by the Red Army.

The numbers are intended to help us understand better; but it is impossible for numbers, however precise, to convey the unquantifiable infinity of the human life, and longing, and love that was lost.

The 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz is dedicated to the heart-breaking, melancholy memory of what was lost and to the remarkable few who walked out through the gates. In their determination to affirm life anew, they became the living embodiment of the psalmist's cri de coeur: "We shall not die, but live."

CANADA

BBC Praises Parizeau

MONTREAL — B'nai Brith Canada's (BBC) League for Human Rights last week congratulated Quebec premier Jacques Parizeau for accepting the resignation of longtime Quebec sovereigntist Pierre Bourgault as his communications advisor.

Earlier this month, Bourgault warned of a "dangerous situation" should the upcoming sovereignty referendum be defeated solely by the non-francophone vote.

"We are heartened the premier does not share Bourgault's bigoted view of Quebec society," the League said in a statement.

BQ Sympathy Message

MONTREAL — The Bloc Quebecois (BQ) last week extended a message of sympathy to the Jewish community on the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz.

"On this anniversary of the dismantling (sic) of the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp, the BQ remembers the hundreds of thousands of victims who perished in the death camps during World War II and wants to transmit its sympathy and its solidarity to the families of the victims ... [and] to the Jewish people.

"In order that the atrocities committed in the camp are never repeated, the Official Opposition wishes to emphasize the courage of the survivors ... and their descendants who live now among us."

Letter to Scott King

MONTREAL — Canadian Jewish Congress last week expressed the Canadian Jewish community's best wishes to Coretta Scott King on the occasion of the U.S. holiday in memory of her late husband, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

"Dr. King's vision and leadership remain as an unparalleled model in the struggle for human rights and dignity and the affinity of all peoples," Congress stated in a letter to his widow.

Degree for Malitzky

TORONTO — The New York-based Jewish Theological Seminary of America (JTS) will confer an honorary degree on Toronto educator Harold Malitzky.

Malitzky will receive an honorary doctor of pedagogy degree at a special convocation in New York on March 5.

He was nominated for the honor by the Jewish Educators Assembly International, the professional organization for educators within the Conservative movement.

Malitzky is a past associate director of the Toronto Board of Jewish Education, an instructor in the Midrasha Jewish Teachers' Seminary of Toronto and has been involved with the Orah School and the National Bible Contest.

Radio Host Apologizes

ST. CATHARINES — Local talk show host John Michaels of radio station CKTB apologized last week for allowing a caller to denigrate Jews on the air.

The incident came during a discussion of financial issues when a caller made a statement about Orthodox Jews to the effect that "the longer the beard, the bigger the crook."

The comments prompted a flurry of calls to Canadian Jewish Congress, which complained to the radio station. An apology followed.

In a rambling on-air statement, Michaels said he has never "spoken down on religion." The caller made comments that were "derogatory of the traditional Jewish religion. As such I should have challenged it. I didn't and I apologize."

ISRAEL

Harder Line on Egypt?

JERUSALEM — Officials in Israel's Foreign Ministry have reportedly recommended Israel take a harsher stand toward Egypt in an effort to change what is described as Cairo's increasingly negative attitude toward Jerusalem.

Israeli concerns that Egypt has been slowing the peace process and Israel's normalization of ties with other Arab states were factors in the Foreign Ministry's recommendations, the daily Ha'aretz reported.

Palestinians Protest

JERUSALEM — Two Palestinians and one Israeli soldier were injured last Tuesday, after hundreds of Palestinians marched on the Jewish settlement of Psagot, north of Ramallah.

The march was one of three protest rallies Palestinians held throughout the West Bank, opening a campaign by the newly-established Palestinian Anti-Settlement Committee.

Rallies were also held on Tuesday near Hebron and Ariel, and were attended by four ministers of the Palestinian Authority.

Hawatmeh in Gaza?

JERUSALEM — A hard-line Palestinian leader, whose group was responsible for one of the bloodiest terrorist attacks against Israel, has reportedly asked to move to the Gaza Strip.

Foreign Ministry officials said no official request had been received. But they said a third party had informed Israel that Hawatmeh was rumored to be interested in setting up residence in Gaza.

The group was responsible for the 1974 attack on a school in the northern Israeli town of Ma'alot in which 24 Israelis, most of them teenagers, were killed.

Bus Drivers' Training

JERUSALEM — Israeli bus drivers began a training course in how to deal with terrorists. They learned how to identify potential terrorists, conduct body searches, do hand-to-hand combat and stop their vehicles in an emergency.

Tribute to Wallenberg

JERUSALEM — Knesset Speaker Shevah Weiss opened last week's plenum session with a tribute to Raoul Wallenberg, the Swedish diplomat who saved thousands of Hungarian Jews from death in 1944 by providing them with Swedish papers and safe houses.

At another event marking the 50th anniversary of Wallenberg's arrest by the Soviets, Ben-Gurion University of the Negev released rare documents and testimonies from nine people saved by Wallenberg.

WORLD

Foundation Launched

BONN — A new foundation has been launched in Germany to promote historical research into the Holocaust. The foundation was established some 10 days before the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz and Birkenau concentration camps.

Mazel Tov Times Six

JOHANNESBURG — It was mazel tov six times over when the world's first surviving sextuplets celebrated their 21st birthday.

The Jewish sextuplets made the Guinness Book of Records with their birth, one month premature, by Caesarean section in 1974 in Cape Town.

A Kosher Superbowl

MIAMI — For the first time in Superbowl history, kosher food will be available for the 75,000 fans expected for this Sunday's game.

Kosher food concessions will be set up on the lower and upper decks of Joe Robbie Stadium in Miami for Superbowl XXIX. The concessions have already proven popular at all home Florida Marlins and Miami Dolphins games.

The concessions are a project of Chabad of South Broward, Fla.

El Al's monopoly comes to an end

Air Canada, Sunquest launch own services

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — After enjoying a monopoly for years on direct flights from Canada to Tel Aviv, El Al Israel Airlines now faces tough competition from two Canadian companies that have announced they will provide parallel service.

At a Toronto press conference last week, ebullient officials of Sunquest Vacations Ltd. announced details of a new weekly charter service from Toronto to Tel Aviv, beginning in May with fares as low as $1,099 return.

And earlier, officials at Air Canada announced the company will begin twice-weekly direct flights from Toronto to Tel Aviv on June 20, with fares as yet undetermined.

Air Canada, which held the right to fly to Israel for some time, apparently felt the need to act only after Israel's Civil Aviation Authority granted permission to Sunquest for the charter service on Dec. 25.

"We have a new international air policy — use it or lose it," said Air Canada spokesperson Kym Robertson in explaining the airline's belated entry into the Canada-to-Israel market.

In Israel, tourism minister Uzi Baram welcomed Air Canada's move.

Yona Nechustan, the Montreal-based vice-president and general manager for El Al Canada, is no longer suggesting El Al will discontinue its twice-weekly service from Toronto and Montreal if Sunquest — not to mention Air Canada — is allowed a share of the air traffic between Canada and Israel.

"El Al has plans, and we'll come out in due time with them," he said. "Meanwhile, we'll try to compete with all the others. The skies are open for El Al, too, and we'll do what we have to do."

In Toronto for the Sunquest press conference, Shmuel Zurel, a senior official in Israel's tourism ministry, told a breakfast gathering of Jewish community leaders that El Al intends to enhance its Monday and Wednesday flights from Canada with a third weekly flight on Sundays, beginning in June, to compete directly with Sunquest.

Sunquest's charters are set to depart Toronto around midday each Sunday from May to October, with a one-hour stopover at Ireland's Shannon Airport. The return flights are to depart Tel Aviv on Monday mornings.

Flights are aboard 300-seat Airbus 310 widebody aircraft operated by Air Club International of Quebec.

Both Sunquest's European division vice-president Eddie Carroll and Air Canada's Robertson agree there is great pent-up demand for Israel among Canadian travellers. "The peace process is transforming the whole Middle East, and making Israel a very appealing market for us," Robertson said.

"People in our sales department have told us that, for a few days after we announced this route, the phones were ringing off the hook."

Last year, roughly 40,000 Canadians traveled to Israel, a number that Ruth Ben-Tzur, director of the Israel Government Tourist Office in Toronto, expects will increase substantially in 1995. "Israel's endorsement of open skies has created a brand new era," she said. "Canadians considering a trip to Israel now have more options than ever."

Advertised prices are already reflecting the new realities of the marketplace. Last week, two Toronto travel agencies, Aufgang Travel and Payless Travel, ran ads in The CJN offering discounted return flights to Israel for as low as $849. Over the past year, El Al's lowest listed fare from Toronto to Tel Aviv was $1,338.

Even if the new fares attract many new Canadian travellers, some industry insiders wonder how full the six proposed weekly flights from Canada to Israel will be.

"It would be very optimistic to think the market could absorb all the extra capacity that has been put there," Carroll acknowledged.

"I like to think Sunquest is a leader in this market and not a follower. We are totally committed to this program that we're running to Israel, and we feel confident it will be successful."

Reform leader urges outreach to non-Jews

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Rabbi Alexander Schindler, the head of the North American Reform movement, came to Toronto last week, not to bury discussions about the role of non-Jews in Reform Jewish life, but to raise them.

Rabbi Schindler publicly stated that individual congregations must set their own boundaries regarding non-Jewish participation in temple life.

The president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (UAHC), a branch of which represents Canada's 8,500 affiliated Reform families, told 250 listeners at Holy Blossom Temple that such discussions "will enable a congregation to define its goals, express its heart, give tradition a vote and build its own special community through its ritual life."

Rabbi Schindler, who first orchestrated an outreach campaign aimed at non-Jewish spouses of temple members in 1978, has gone further in recent years by suggesting the Reform movement attract converts from the larger community.

That suggestion has engendered heated debate, which Rabbi Schindler chose to avoid when invited by Holy Blossom's Rabbi Dow Marmur to clarify his position.

"I don't want to send missionaries to Japan, I don't want to open reading rooms or send our kids to airports," Rabbi Schindler said. "All I want to do is to remove the 'not wanted' signs from our hearts and temple doors and let people know that they are open to all who seek to enter."

While the German-born rabbi seemingly smoothed over the thorny issue of missionary work, his hour-long speech raised pointed questions from audience members.

One man, responding to Rabbi Schindler's opinion that proselytizing can enhance Jewish self-esteem, asked if Jewish resources would not be better spent within the community. Rabbi Schindler said UAHC-sponsored programs for non-Jewish spouses are also attracting equal numbers of outsiders and children of mixed marriages.

Rabbi Alexander Schindler

"It doesn't cost any more money [to reach outside the community]. It's the same teacher," he later told The CJN in response to the same question.

As for his own beliefs about the role of non-Jews in the synagogue, which he clearly separated from the UAHC's position, Rabbi Schindler said he has no problem with non-Jews touching the Torah scrolls and advocated "maximum openness.

"[Let us] not use ritual exclusion to express our emotional grievances, conscious or unconscious, historical or contemporary," he said.

The majority of UAHC member congregations, which include 23 Canadian ones under the umbrella of the regional Canadian Council for Reform Judaism, grant membership and congregational voting rights to non-Jewish spouses but not governing roles.

Some American synagogues have sought to include non-Jewish parents in the Jewish life cycle events of their children, scripting special blessings and prayers for those invited to ascend the bimah.

BJC appoints interim executive director

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Longtime community worker Gordon Wolfe is planning a temporary shift in careers beginning Feb. 1, when he starts a three-month tenure as executive director of the Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC).

Wolfe, executive director of Jewish Family & Child Services for 14 years, has consented to serve in the interim position while a search is conducted for a full-time executive director.

His posting will begin only days after an Ontario court is scheduled to consider a proposal to pay creditors of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC), allowing its successor on Bathurst Street to move ahead without the looming spectre of bankruptcy.

Gordon Wolfe

Wolfe said his main functions will be to bring stability and confidence in the future to the BJC. On a more concrete level, he will assist in the search for a permanent executive director and help develop a constitution for the new organization.

"On a short-term basis, my approach will be to manage it and keep it going on an even keel," Wolfe said. "I think to a certain extent the crisis is over. Now it's time to rebuild."

Concern expressed

From his office next door to the JCC in the Lipa Green Building, Wolfe said he viewed the deterioration of the JCC with concern. "I don't know what exactly went off the rails there. My concern was that it has to be cleared up, fixed, changed and dealt with.

"I don't see a community centre as solely a membership club," Wolfe said. "It belongs to the community. I agreed to this job because of my commitment to the concept of a centre for Toronto Jewry."

The JCC's last full-time executive director was Paul Brownstein, who was one of 32 JCC staff let go last August. For a short time after his departure, JCC director of operations Harold Cipin served as acting executive director until he accepted a job elsewhere.

Ze'ev Hymowitz, a consultant with a U.S.-based association of Jewish community centres, was brought in to stabilize the situation. He returned to the United States at the end of October and senior staff have been running the facility under the supervision of the BJC board since.

Wolfe said he plans to devote 75 per cent of his time in the next three months to the BJC and 25 per cent to JF&CS.

JF&CS president Garry Foster said Wolfe will still be available to the agency "on an ongoing basis for consultation and advice."

BJC board chair Michael Kerbel called Wolfe a highly respected communal worker. "He represents integrity and administrative excellence. We're fortunate that he will be assisting us. Gordon gets results."

Fundraising book out

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — There is no such thing as a poor fundraising event — only poor planning, according to the recently published book, Cash Now.

Authors Norman and Aaron Franks, father and son, have nearly 30 years of fundraising experience with community groups, charities and other non-profit organizations. They have learned a lot during this time

The book, which outlines 29 fundraising ideas, is not meant for such major campaigns as Israel Bonds or federations. Rather, it is intended as a source of creative ideas for smaller groups.

Potential amounts to be raised run from a few hundred dollars to several thousand.

The book gives full details on how to organize, promote and operate a fundraiser. Each event is explained in one chapter divided into sections, such as event description, logistics, licences and permits (if required), time allowed for planning, personnel requirements, publicity and promotion, sponsors and prizes, space required, execution and potential financial results.

Probably the most profitable idea proposed is a community phone directory, which seems best for smaller communities where gathering information may be simpler than, for example, in Toronto or Montreal.

Nevertheless, the authors point out that a Vancouver Jewish community telephone directory has been prepared as a fundraising project. It lists 5,000 families, complete with phone and fax numbers, addresses and postal codes. It also carries advertising and is published every two years. The books are sold to members of the community.

The Franks estimate such a project can net $65,000 every two years. Although much of the work is done by volunteers, in Vancouver some professional help is used.

Most of the ideas in Cash Now are practical, although some are rather unusual.

The book stresses the importance of cash control. "Never have only one person responsible for cash," the authors advise.

At $39.95 plus tax and shipping cost, Cash Now can be a good investment for an organization.

Associated launches financial plan

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto has launched a comprehensive development plan to ensure its long-term financial health while meeting students' evolving needs.

Project Hatzlacha (Success) is gearing up to raise $10 million over the next five years, said Dr. Harry Krakowsky, immediate past president of the school, who is co-chairing the project with Henry Koschitzky.

A recent major contribution by local philanthropist Buschie Kamin in support of the newest Associated building is included in that amount. The Jack and Buschie Kamin Education Centre, one of four Associated campuses, opened earlier this month on Atkinson Avenue in Thornhill.

Project Hatzlacha is not specifically for the new school, Krakowsky emphasized. All four campuses will benefit from the campaign. Plans include renovating the Hurwich branch, located on Finch Avenue, and the Danilack branch on Leslie Street, to accommodate a junior high school and administrative offices respectively.

The Neptune Avenue branch, built in 1957, is to be replaced with a smaller building to house preschool and elementary classes. Part of the site is to be sold and used possibly for subsidized housing.

While Project Hatzlacha will first address immediate costs of building and renovation, donors will have the option of designating contributions for specific endowment funds or special projects, said Krakowsky.

A substantial proportion of Associated's fundraising dollars has come from people who don't have children or even grandchildren at the school, said Krakowsky. "Donors have been community people, because it's a community school."

The school will encourage an ongoing relationship with contributors "so that they can follow the program to fruition."

Associated's annual tuition fees of $6,450 cover operating costs only. Forty-five per cent of students receive tuition assistance averaging $3,500, said Krakowsky.

Subsidies, which have fallen victim to budget cuts in recent years, are provided by the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto through the Board of Jewish Education.

Associated serves a diverse population of over 2,500 students. According to Krakowsky, the school has identified at least 15 different languages spoken in students' homes.

"We provide a tremendously good service to the community. A lot of students are not affiliated, and their only connection with the community is going to day school. We're in the Jewish continuity business."

Hatred and evil

Yet again, we are repulsed and indignant at the killing and maiming of Israelis by the murderers who hide under the umbrella of Islamic Jihad. Nineteen people are dead and 60 are injured, cut down and blown apart in a crowded restaurant in Beit Lid, or while running to help their injured comrades. They were the unsuspecting targets of an evil act inspired by the unrepentant hatred of Jews.

Yet again, spokesmen on behalf of Yasser Arafat issued weak and ineffectual statements condemning the bombing. And yet again we see the incongruous scenes of Palestinian mobs celebrating the Israeli deaths.

But there is a limit to the killing, and the suffering, and the agony which the people of Israel will endure before they demand an end to the negotiations with the PLO. The question is: when will the limit be reached?

For many, it has already passed. The Beit Lid bombings bring to almost 125 the number of Israelis who have been killed since the signing of the Declaration of Principles in Washington. Even supporters of the government are publicly questioning the wisdom of its policies.

The government of Israel acted quickly and in the only way it could, short of abandoning negotiations. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin went to see firsthand the place of the carnage. The cabinet convened for an emergency session and decreed Israel indefinitely closed to Palestinian traffic from the territories. This is only an interim response, however, and no solution whatsoever to the problem.

And the terrorism continues. There are no tangible signs that Arafat and his colleagues will join the fight to root out the would-be destroyers of the peace process. In pressing Arafat to act against the radical opponents, the government of Israel is not seeking a scapegoat. It is actually looking to see whether it has a true negotiating partner.

Yasser Arafat must choose between peace with Israel or peace with the rejectionists. Time is slipping away, as is the opportunity for him to achieve something great and long-lasting for his people. He must surely understand that when Israelis are killed, when the peace process is further diminished, so dim the prospects for his people too.

ProMontreal

Hillel the Elder was one of the most influential and beloved of our ancient teachers. He had a special knack for condensing essential lessons of life into short, prescriptive maxims. With the ever-evident success of the initiative ProMontreal, it seems that community leaders in Montreal have become his true, modern disciples.

If I am not for myself, who will be? Rather than stand to the side and glumly watch as increasing numbers of young people left the city, the leadership decided to act for its own benefit and on its own behalf. ProMontreal was started three years ago. It is a program of specific measures aimed at enabling the city's young adults to build their futures in the community.

But, if I am only for myself, what am I? The program attempts to deal head-on with the serious, everyday problems faced by young Jewish adults starting out after university. It offers career counselling and job placement to individuals looking for work. It helps support youth-run businesses. It brings young people together. Most important, however, it gives young adults the possibility of finding a way to establish themselves in Montreal.

As a result, it gives the community its renewal and to their elders the possibility of hope.

And if not now, when? Other communities should take note of the program. For it is clearly a success. The number of young adults turning to it has risen each year, as has the number of young adults choosing to remain in Montreal. The principle underlying ProMontreal, namely an uncompromising, determined commitment to actively, boldly, engage a problem, can be applied to the "continuity" crises faced by most Diaspora communities.

Yemenite children disappeared

Your article in The CJN on Jan. 5, "Yemenite children died of disease in '50s" was very upsetting.

My twin brother is one of those Yemenite children who disappeared, at the age of 3. He did not die of any diseases. Firstly, he was born in Israel in 1951 and did not come from Yemen on the airlift. Secondly, if he died why was my family never given a body to bury? My mother was just thrown out of the hospital with no explanation, and no matter how much she fought for some answers or to see the body, the authorities refused to talk to her and nothing was done. At the time the children on the moshavim in my area were all told to run away when we saw a strange car drive through, because children were being snatched up.

I personally believe that the government at the time knew about what was going on with these children. My reading of the outcome of the government appointed committee is that the cover-up is still going on. I still believe that my brother is out there, alive and well.

Bergen-Belsen liberation marked

With reference to my letter in the Jan. 12 edition of CJN about the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Bergen-Belsen concentration camp, the letter from Herr Arnold Jurgens gave out-of-date information.

The correct mailing address of the World Federation of Bergen-Belsen Associations Inc. is P.O. Box 288, Lenox Hill Station, New York, N.Y., 10021.

Sam E. Bloch is now the president and coordinator. He has informed me that no German government nor any other organization will assist with the cost of attendance.

Rambam outlined personal responsibility

In response to Rabbi Mark Dratch's scholarly article concerning Talmudic law and the recent "drunken defence" ruling, I believe it appropriate to add the words of the Rambam in his Hilchot Hovel Uamzik, Chapter 1, Halacha 11:

"Man is held responsible for his action whether he be awake, asleep or intoxicated when he injures his friend, or ruins his property."

Obviously, it appears that the Halacha upholds the rights of the victim first.

PLO uses The CJN for own purposes

By featuring as a front page story Sheldon Kirshner's meeting Yasser Arafat, The CJN is quite obviously pleased with itself for getting this "scoop." While it is arguable that Israel, of necessity to reach an accommodation with the Palestinians, need have a dialogue with the murderer of schoolchilderen at Ma'aolot and Jewish athletes at Munich, what possible purpose is served by dispatching a reporter from a Canadian Jewish newspaper to Gaza?

Mr. Kirshner did not even succeed in interviewing Arafat but rather allows himself — and your newspaper — to be shamelessly used by the PLO for their own propaganda purposes.

Israel's political system at fault

In order to stem the current self-destructive behavior of the Israeli government and prevent similar irrational actions in the future, the primary causes of the impending debacle must be identified.

The source of all Israeli misfortune is not the BBC, international opinion or Arab intransigence, the trio Israelis use to deny responsibility for their institutional problems. Rather it is their anachronistic and paternalistic political system.

Neither Likud, Labor nor any MK believes in individual responsibility on the part of the voter or themselves, hence their opposition to political primaries which, done properly, would break the "party" stranglehold on the country. As it stands, MKs who surrender the hinterland have nothing to fear from voter wrath, because their primary allegiance is to their party, which shields them from accountability. Only a political system that ties the politician directly to the voter by eliminating party discipline (a la U.S. Congressional districts) will prevent Israel's self-inflicted suicide.

Just ask President Clinton how well the voters respond when political elites, like the Clintons, pursue abstractions at the expense of reality.

Similarly, the Canadian equivalent is the emerging popularity of the Reform Party as a warning to politicians of voter frustration with the status quo. Certainly the Covenant as a basis of Judaism mandates that a Jewish government be built on the premise of individual responsibility, which is necessarily absent in any collectivist or socialist system.

Fortunately, Oslo forces every Jew to re-examine the basic premises and ask what is primary in Judaism, the altruistic concern with the needs of the Palestinians, or the self-interested security needs of the state?

Enriched holiday for Israeli children

Bravo to the readers of The CJN. This year's response to Chanukah Dollars for David was warm and wonderful. Coupled with funds raised by our own members and Jewish students, thousands of Israeli children had an enriched holiday.

1945 - Liberation of Auschwitz - 1995

Commemorating and remembering

By RUTH GRUBER
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

Fifty years ago this month, on Jan. 27, 1945, Soviet troops of the 60th Army of the First Ukrainian Front entered the Auschwitz concentration camp.

There, amid an icy wasteland of incredible horror, they found 7,000 skeletal survivors.

Nine days earlier, as the Red Army approached, the Nazis had blown up crematoriums and gas chambers, set fire to documents and other buildings and forced 60,000 Auschwitz prisoners on a death march westward into the heart of the German Reich.

Wanting no living witnesses to testify to the Nazi atrocities, the Germans left behind only the sick, the weak, the dead and the dying.

In the half century since the Red Army liberated what was Nazi Germany's biggest and most notorious concentration camp complex, Auschwitz has become one of the world's most potent symbols of humanity's inhumanity.

Because of the potency of its symbolism and the enormity of what it represents, Auschwitz has long been the object of controversy.

Thus, it is not surprising that it has also become the object of controversy as Poland prepares to host ceremonies this week to mark the 50th anniversary of its liberation.

Auschwitz's very name has become a synonym for the Holocaust, as well as for evil. The exhortation "Arbeit Macht Frei" ("Work Makes You Free") arching in iron letters over the camp's main gate stands out as the ultimate in cynical depravity.

In addition to its universal symbolism as the ultimate in inhumanity, Auschwitz represents different things to different people.

Child survivors of Auschwitz on the day of liberation in January, 1945, photographed by Soviet soldiers who liberated the camp. [From Pictorial History of the Holocaust, published by Yad Vashem. Supplied to The CJN by the Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre, Toronto.]

It is as if at times the word means different things in different languages.

"An interesting thing that emerges from our research in various countries is that there is no one meaning," says David Singer, director of research and publications of the American Jewish Committee.

"Different people, different historical experiences, different memories end up filtering the memory of Auschwitz itself."

Between 1.1 million and 1.5 million people were murdered at Auschwitz between 1940 and 1945. Ninety percent of the victims, or at least one million, were Jews from all over Europe. Most of them were killed during the last two-and-a-half years of the camp's operation, at the Auschwitz II camp at Birkenau, three km from the main camp.

Yet Auschwitz was set up in 1940 primarily as a concentration camp for Polish political prisoners. For the first two years of its operation, its main purpose was the torture and murder of the Polish elite, including priests.

In all, at least 75,000 ethnic Poles were killed there.

For Poles, Auschwitz represents the chief symbol of the Nazi oppression of Poland — and indeed, under the Communists, this was what was taught in Polish schools.

Official Polish ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the liberation — the first major commemorations linked to the end of World War II — were intended to stress the universal meaning of Auschwitz.

But this ecumenical, universalist approach to honoring the memory of the dead came under fire from the beginning.

Polish President Lech Walesa, a Nobel Peace Prize winner, had intended to invite all living fellow Peace Prize laureates to attend the ceremonies and launch an appeal for peace and tolerance to the world.

That triggered an avalanche of protest from Jews, since it would have included PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat, who jointly won the 1994 prize along with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

Jews protested the inclusion of Arafat, who for decades was the symbol of Arab terror against Jews.

The protest forced Walesa to change the invitation to include Nobel Peace Prize recipients only through 1993.

In addition to the Arafat debacle, some Jewish organizations have protested that Jewish participation in the commemorations should be given more prominence and criticized what they saw as attempts to "Polonize" the ceremonies.

Two weeks before the ceremonies, Jewish groups in Warsaw announced that a separate Jewish ceremony would be added to the program.

"We have the right to weep alone," said Arnold Mostowicz, an Auschwitz survivor and head of a Polish organization of Jewish ex-combatants and survivors.

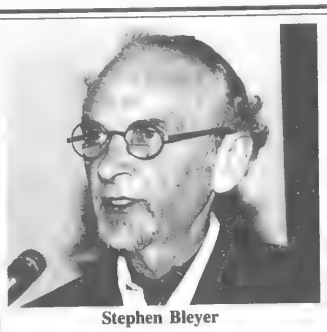
"Let me live a few more days ... I want to see the day of liberation."

These were the words whispered by the "old man" who occupied the lowest tier of a triple bunk next to mine in larger F, the so-called hospital lager of Auschwitz-Birkenau. This infirmary was in effect a waiting room for the dying skeletons.

I was 14 years old in January 1945. The "old" emaciated man lying next to me must have been 50 years old. I listened to him for days. We knew that all our lives were hanging on a very thin thread. We knew he did not have very long to live. I listened to him describe his children. I heard about his wife, about life in his village somewhere in Hungary. Notwithstanding his suffering, in spite of his wretched condition, for reasons that are difficult to comprehend, he wanted to see the day of "liberation."

Some short days before the first Russian officer walked into our miserable graveyard for the living, symbolizing at last the moment of liberation, the blades of straw that had dropped on the face of this 50-year-old "old man" from the bunk above him, remained unnoticed. He was liberated by death from something that, in the strange language of Birkenau, was called "living."

We were all looking forward to that day of "liberation." What was it really that we were expecting? My dreams were surreal, just like our celebrations are surreal to many of us today! Sometimes my dreams of liberation included a return to the embrace of parents, grandparents, family and friends, who in fact had been swept away by this infernal conflagration. Sometimes my dreams of liberation were more like nightmares of an anguished and tortured soul that was not prepared to face reality after an existence suspended between life and death.



Stephen Bleyer

Only some weeks earlier, the gas chambers and crematoria were a reality of the unreal world of the lager. Some days after our liberation, the thoughts of survival that had dominated our lives were superseded by the realization that hundreds of thousands had been destroyed by those demonic instruments of death manipulated by human beings.

In spite of it all, with all its contradictions, liberation also symbolized a renaissance, the triumph of the human spirit. That human spirit now has to cry out in an injured world. We must not tolerate any physical or spiritual subjugation of human beings anywhere on this globe.

Stephen Bleyer is the president of the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre.

Shema

You who live secure
In your warm houses,
Who return at evening to find
Hot food and friendly faces:

Consider whether this is a man,
Who labors in the mud
Who knows no peace
Who fights for a crust of bread
Who dies at a yes or a no.
Consider whether this is a woman,
Without hair or name
With no more strength to remember
Eyes empty and womb cold
As a frog in winter.

Consider that this has been:
I commend these words to you.
Engrave them on your hearts
When you are in your house, when you walk on your way,
When you go to bed, when you rise.
Repeat them to your children.
Or may your house crumble,
Disease render you powerless,
Your offspring avert their faces from you.

It's difficult to get rid of our past

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

There has been much discussion about the announcement which Multiculturalism Minister Sheila Finestone recently made. The past, she said in effect, is now gone, and Canada — while acknowledging its wrong-doing with regard to a number of ethnic communities — cannot afford to compensate the victims. She thereby drew a final line under a subject that has been much discussed and has raised many questions.

Let me begin my comments by saying that I have known Mrs. Finestone for many years and consider her a good friend. She has been a loyal and active member of our community and has always exhibited a deep concern for social and moral issues. She comes to it naturally, as the daughter of our late and much lamented friend Monroe Abbey, who was the honorary president of the Canadian Jewish Congress. Mrs. Finestone deserves marks for doing something which many people — and not only those connected with the Reform party — consider inadvisable and plain wrong. The government, they say, should not have apologized at all. Mrs. Finestone defied the no-sayers and did the courageous and right thing.

It is said that nations have only self-interests and no particular sense of morality, a luxury afforded by the individuals who make up the nation. But we who are living in Canada do believe that the aggregate of our individual moralities makes up something akin to a national morality — or at least we would like to think that it exists. Our history is not free of gross mis-steps vis-a-vis the Native population, Orientals, Jews, and a number of others who are now waiting at the door to be recognized both historically and financially.

Therefore, what about compensation to the injured ethnic groups? Some of them were deprived not only of liberty but also of their earthly goods, real estate, bank accounts and whatever they owned, and were never repaid when the emergency of the two world wars had passed.

Political, legal decisions

The issues are complex and cannot be solved by a simple yes or no. My brief comment on them therefore is intended to continue the discussion rather than to finalize it.

Governments make decisions which can be broadly divided into political and legal ones. Political decisions are generally judged by the electorate, which either approves or disapproves of them and judges the incumbents accordingly.

Legal decisions are of another kind and are reviewable by the courts. To be sure, every legal system has a statute of limitations, which is to say that after some years of inaction a case becomes moot and no further action is possible. Murder is exempt from this statute — and so is morality. It has its own rules and this is the problem with Mrs. Finestone's decision. We Jews have long advocated the importance of keeping alive the memory of the past. Of course the Holocaust is not comparable to the matters disposed of by the Canadian government, but at the heart the principle is the same, namely that the past does impinge upon the present when morality becomes the issue.

It is my view that the removal of certain ethnic groups to tents and other places was a political decision, but that the expropriation of property and the confiscation of bank accounts should be open to review. Understandably, we Jews would like to have the turning away of the ship St. Louis reviewed. But the infamous decisions of Messrs. King and Blair were political and not subject to compensation. To be sure, a memorial to the dreadful incident would have been a desirable form of apology, but there is no legal right to obtain it, much as I would like to see such a memorial erected.

But taking people's possessions is another matter. That issue is not as yet dead, certainly not on the level of moral discussion. And neither is the very difficult portfolio of multiculturalism that Mrs. Finestone has. The debate speaks to the nature of who we are as a nation, and so does the department she heads. I wish her success in her labors, and I know that she understands better than anyone else the complexity of the matters on which I have touched.

Rabin's policies confuse friends, foes

By Yeshayahu Anug

The difficulties faced by Israel's prime minister amount to much more than a mid-term crisis. His authority within the government and in his own party is weakening and his implementation of the peace initiative has now reached a critical stage.

As the outcome of his process will affect this country's future for years to come, it has also become the most important test of Yitzhak Rabin's leadership.

Before he won the last general elections, he had promised to bring peace with the Arabs, but he was not behind the secret negotiations that reversed the official attitude to the PLO.

But by endorsing the results and by signing the accords, he has taken personal responsibility for their implementation. His reputation as a hard-liner who would not compromise Israel's security needs helped lend credence to the hope of peace within large segments of Israel's public. He never promised a smooth ride.

While Arab rejectionists took some time to react violently to the prospects of a settlement, the opposition in Israel to any territorial compromise was quicker to mobilize. Decisively manipulated by the settlers' community, which rightly felt a peace regulation would endanger their future, their campaign of obstructionism and of personal vilification against the prime minister was soon adopted by the entire opposition to the government.

At first Rabin appeared untouched by the campaign and seemed confident he could maintain his edge of popular support. But when Arab opposition took the form of escalating terrorism attacks, more savage and more frequent than was anticipated, and when the new partnership with the PLO proved to be quite ineffective in the control of Hamas terrorism, Rabin's attitude changed. As the right-wing agitation against what it calls "the prohibitive costs of peace" intensified, Rabin responded by hardening his stand in Arab negotiations while at the same time showing surprising flexibility and softness in dealing with the activities of the hard-line Jewish opposition.

Extremists calling the tune

While critics suspected Rabin was turning his back on the accords, his followers explained his ambiguous policies were designed to avoid violent clashes with the settlers. The progress of peace, so it was said, would take care of the extremists on both sides. But neither the spectacular conclusion of the peace accord with Jordan, nor other peace celebrations such as the Nobel Prize, had their desired impact on public opinion.

These days the tune is called by extremists on both sides and government reactions appear to be improvised. If a grand design exists, it is invisible. What the public sees is hesitation and improvisation. The main issues of the conflict still hang in the air, unattended, threatening to explode in the face of the would-be peacemakers.

It is true the provision of the Israel-PLO agreements which left basic issues to be negotiated later — frontiers, the Jewish settlements, refugees and the future of Jerusalem — made the interim agreement possible. But the underlying hope was that during the autonomy period, mutual trust would grow and eventually lead to a solution.

Until recently, trust was encouraged by the negotiating teams, but it was also steadily undermined by each side's efforts to improve its bargaining positions at the expense of the other. The current major clash over the settlements threatens to deadlock negotiations with the Palestinians altogether, unless a more durable solution emerges from the latest high-level meetings.

In dealing with these and other controversial issues, including economic policy, Rabin could until recently count on a sufficient degree of consensus and discipline in his government, although not all the ministers shared his views and tactics. Now, as his grip seems to loosen, internal divisions and rivalries are surfacing all too frequently and have all the symptoms of a premature war of succession. Unless Rabin manages to restore his hegemony quickly and takes care of his internal front, he risks losing his grip on foreign affairs as well, a field in which he was remarkably successful.

This week in particular, his agenda is bursting with problems, most of them complicated by inaction. Though the political-military talks with Syria will now resume after a prolonged lull, and, contrary to appearences, may even show some progress, no immediate results can be expected.

The principal contest is on the Israeli-Palestinian issue. PLO ineffectiveness and rhetoric, coupled with Israeli neglect and lack of foresight, could well precipitate major turmoil in the territories.

Can you find the hidden message?

By Allan Gould

Remember subliminal advertising? I may be dating myself here — and who else would date me? as my wife Merle would say — but back in the 1950s, there was an explosion of terror in many parts of society when it was announced by some scientists that "subliminal advertising" could be used to trick people into responding to the evil machinations of advertisers.

Examples abounded: YOU REALLY WANT TO BUY SOME POPCORN NOW! might flash in the middle of the cowboy movie at the local cinema, but so quickly, it would subliminally act upon our brains.

Since that brief "subliminal scare" of the mid-'50s, I've rarely heard anything about this strange concept. TAKE OUT A SUBSCRIPTION TO PARCHMENT.

Now, Parchment — in case you've never heard of it, subliminally or otherwise — is quite an extraordinary thing: A group of fine Canadian Jewish poets (Shel Krakofsky, Seymour Mayne, Kenneth Sherman, Miriam Waddington), scholars (Adam Fuerstenberg, Michael Greenstein, Ruby Newman, Malca Litovitz), and non-entities (Allan Gould), along with several others, publish a yearly paperback.

YES, PARCHMENT — JUST 12 BUCKS FOR ONE YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION; $20 FOR TWO YEARS! SEND YOUR CHEQUE OR MONEY ORDERS TO PARCHMENT, 445 HAMILTON ROAD, LONDON, ONTARIO, N5Z 1S2.

Anyway, I do hope that I am not betraying confidences here, but when I was at our annual meeting in North York, Ont., (a modest, southern suburb of Thornhill) a most interesting series of conversations took place.

WHAT A GREAT GIFT IDEA! GIVE SOMEONE YOU LOVE PARCHMENT.

SHEL KRAKOFSKY: Maybe we should threaten.

RUBY NEWMAN: I'm not so sure that's a good idea, Shel.

MALCA LITOVITZ: I agree with Ruby. It's a magazine of Jewish writing, so I think we should be more Jewish, and play on their guilt.

ALLAN GOULD: How do you mean?

BUY PARCHMENT. YOU WON'T REGRET IT!

MALCA LITOVITZ: Something like this: "You call yourself an intellectual? You buy Leonard Cohen's collected poetry, and you read Mordecai Richler and Irving Layton, and you won't shell out 12 bucks to read the Cohens, Richlers and Laytons of the future? "

ADAM FUERSTENBERG: I'm not so sure that would work. What if we advertise? For instance: You spend $8 for a movie which you forget the next day! Yet you could have a wonderful, attractive paperback volume mailed to your home, well-bound, lasting for years, which will sit on your shelf and bring you many hours of pleasure and joy whenever you reach for it — for only $12! What a deal!

RUBY NEWMAN: It isn't easy to get people to support something like this. Hey, Gould — you call yourself creative. What are your ideas on how to sell Parchment?

ALLAN GOULD: Actually, I was thinking of doing something subliminal.

KENNETH SHERMAN: Subliminal, what the heck do you mean by that?

Couple finds happiness in West Bank

Sheldon Kirshner visits a West Bank settlement where the future seems fairly secure.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

When Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin imposed a building freeze in the territories shortly after assuming office in the summer of 1992, he exempted several thousand housing units nearing completion around Jerusalem and the old Green Line from his long-anticipated plan.

One of the settlements unaffected by the government's policy was Alfei Menashe, several kilometres from the Israeli town of Kfar Saba and about 35 kilometres northeast of Tel Aviv.

Here, on a stony, windswept ridge, approximately 800 new units are nearly ready for occupancy. The majority of the new homes are pretty cottages with white stucco walls and red tile roofs that could easily fit into any fashionable California suburb.

As a result of these exceptions to Rabin's rule and a relatively high birthrate, the Jewish population on the disputed West Bank is growing. Israel's Central Bureau of Statistics reports that the growth rate in 1993 was 10 percent.

By all accounts, a good proportion of new settlers streaming into the West Bank are like Motti and Patricia Veinman, one of Alfei Menashe's first residents.

Both in their mid-40s, with two grown children, the Veinmans settled in Alfei Menashe 11 years ago, moving here from the congested Tel Aviv suburb of Bat Yam. Housing was far cheaper, the weather was better and the quality of life looked promising.

"It had nothing to do with politics or ideology," explained Motti. "We simply wanted to improve our lives."

In Bat Yam, which is south of Tel Aviv, the Veinmans lived like most Israelis, in a crowded flat with 3½ rooms. But in Alfei Menashe, they have an attractive townhouse with six rooms, as well as a front lawn and a garden with fruit trees.

They paid $90,000 (US) for their dream home. In Israel, they could not have bought it for less than about $160,000.

When the Veinmans purchased their roomy dwelling, the Likud, with Menachem Begin as prime minister, was in power and deeply committed to creating facts on the ground in Judea and Samaria. In line with his philosophy, Begin (and his successor, Yitzhak Shamir) encouraged Jews to populate the territories, providing them with inexpensive land and low-interest mortgages that dramatically lowered the cost of housing.

Due to this zealous policy, the Jewish population of the West Bank — which is inhabited by about 900,000 Palestinian Arabs — swelled.

Despite the physical dangers of living in what is essentially an Arab sea, the Veinmans are eminently satisfied with their lives in Alfei Menashe.

"I'm happy," said Motti, whose parents left Radom, Poland, before World War II for greener pastures in Palestine. "It's quiet. The air is good. It's cleaner. And it's not as humid as on the coastal plain."

Patricia, who came to Israel as a new immigrant from Paris four months before the outbreak of the 1967 Six Day War, is even more effusive.

"I have a very beautiful life here. In fact, I was reborn in Alfei Menashe."

With a population of about 1,000 families, Alfei Menashe ranks as one of the biggest settlements on the West Bank. It is a neat, well-planned community, with its own municipal building, shopping centre, schools, synagogue, mikvah and a sports centre which boasts of an indoor and outdoor swimming pool, a weight room and tennis courts.

Whether Alfei Menashe is strategically vital to Israel is debatable. But the fact of the matter is that it's deceptively close to Israel's Mediterranean shore. On most days, from a bluff here, Tel Aviv's skyline is startlingly visible.

"And on a clear day, you can see Hadera and Haifa," said Motti, a work wear distributor who commutes to his job in Israel.

Part of a bloc of Jewish settlements in this sector of the West Bank, Alfei Menashe is less than three kilometres from the Arab town of Qalqilya.

Prior to the Six Day War, and particularly during the 1950s, Israeli settlements in the vicinity of Qalqilya were subjected to Arab infiltration raids that cut a swath of death and destruction.

In one of its most fearsome reprisals, the Israeli army attacked Jordanian positions in Qalqilya in October 1953, killing 88 Arab Legioners. Israeli casualties were 18 dead and 88 wounded. The commander of the Israeli raiding party was a young major, Mordechai Gur, a future Israel Defence Forces chief of staff.

Forty-two years later, the dangers for Israeli civilians living in West Bank communities like Alfei Menashe still loom.

Although Alfei Menashe has been relatively insulated from the Arab violence that frequently rocks the West Bank, it has had its share of human tragedies.

On April 11, 1987, a 35-year-old resident of Alfei Menashe, Ofra Moses, was murdered by terrorists when her car was firebombed near a citrus grove close to Qalqilya. She was on her way to buy Passover supplies in Israel.

The road to Alfei Menashe from Israel proper bypasses Qalqilya, but is still vulnerable. After the Moses incident, for example, two settlers in a car were seriously injured by flying rocks.

The Veinmans have been among the more fortunate, never having been attacked by Arabs. Patricia — a clerk in a bank in Israel — carries a gun when she leaves the safety of her home, but Motti does not.

Before the intifadah, or Palestinian rebellion, erupted in December 1987, scores of Israelis, including Motti and his wife, regularly shopped in Qalqilya for bargains. "There were traffic jams leading to Qalqilya," recalled their Tel Aviv friend, Ida Heilweill. "Everything was so cheap."

But for the past six years, the Veinmans and almost every settler of Alfei Menashe have rarely, if ever, set foot there.

When the Veinmans moved to Alfei Menashe, they were centrists politically, anything but messianic radicals claiming the West Bank for the Jewish people.

But since then, they have moved steadily away from the centre, and today, they are firmly in the right-wing camp. In the last general election, Motti and Patricia voted for the Likud.

Not surprisingly, then, neither Motti nor Patricia supports the September 1993 Declaration of Principles or the May 1994 formal peace agreement between Israel and the PLO.

"I don't believe in this peace process with the Palestinians," Patricia declared quite vehemently. "I want peace, but I don't trust the PLO. As long as the PLO has the word jihad (holy war or struggle) in its vocabulary, it can't be trusted."

Patricia, however, is glad that the Israeli army has withdrawn from much of the Gaza Strip. "Let them kill each other," she said in a reference to the internecine Palestinian strife there since July 1994.

Unlike some West Bank settlers, the Veinmans do not fear that the Israeli government will abandon them. They are confident that Israel will not give up Alfei Menashe, which is actually farther away from Qalqilya than Kfar Saba.

But if push ever comes to shove and Alfei Menashe is relinquished, Patricia intends to stay. Not even the inducement of financial compensation, she claims, would prompt her to leave the place she dearly loves.

Motti, though, is pragmatic. If Alfei Menashe is eliminated on the political chopping block, he will pack up his belongings and regrettably leave the settlement that he and several thousand Jews call home.

Mideast Analysis
By Sheldon Kirshner

Arafat's travails

Six months after returning to the Gaza Strip from exile in Tunisia, Yasser Arafat's star is waning, and he faces what is perhaps his gravest crisis.

Arafat, chairman of the PLO and head of the Palestine National Authority (PNA) in Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho, has come under intense fire from Israel and his fellow Palestinians.

The Israeli government has charged Arafat with being soft on terrorism, lax in fulfilling promises contained in the 1993 Declaration of Principles (DoP), incendiary in some of his remarks and tolerant of inflammatory statements voiced by associates.

More than 100 Israelis have been murdered by Palestinian extremists in the past year. Last week, the death toll rose still higher with the suicide bombing at Beit Lid which killed 19 Israelis. The PNA has acquitted itself rather poorly in fighting terrorism, but to be completely fair, Israel has not been able to crush terrorism either.

And in a grave breach of the DoP, which suggests weakness on Arafat's part, he has failed to eliminate clauses in the PLO's 1968 National Covenant calling for Israel's destruction.

Some of Arafat's rhetoric has shocked Israel. Recently, he referred to Israel as "the Israeli enemy" before correcting himself. Prior to that, he called for a "jihad" against Israel.

At a graduation ceremony for Palestinian security service trainees in Jericho, the cadets shouted "Haifa" and "Ashdod," indicating a desire to snuff out Israel's existence. Meanwhile, Farouk Kaddoumi, the official in charge of the PLO's foreign relations, declared that Israel "must come to an end."

Arafat remains a widely revered figure in the Palestinian movement. But his lustre has been tarnished.

Some admirers like Haidar Abdel Shafi and Edward Said have become disillusioned with him, saying that Arafat gave up too much, too soon, in the Oslo negotiations that culminated in the DoP. They argue, for example, that the fate of the Jewish settlements in the territories should not have been left for final status talks, and that the issue of the 1948 Palestinian refugees should have been placed on the agenda.

Many Palestinians claim that Arafat has concentrated power in his own hands, created an intimidating regime with multiple security services, surrounded himself with compliant yes-men, stifled dissent and muzzled the press.

More ominously, Arafat is threatened by open rebellion from Hamas and Islamic Jihad, which vehemently denounce the DoP and the very idea of peace with Israel.

Arafat had counted on $2.5 billion in pledges from donor nations to revive the anemic economy in the Palestinian autonomous areas. But due to the PNA's inability to establish proper accounting procedures, the funds have barely trickled in, leaving Arafat open to accusations that he has not improved the lives of his people.

Rabbinic Reflections

By RABBI JOSEPH KELMAN

In the past few years there has been much discussion and many articles written on the topic of continuity, which has become the catch word to express our concerns and fears about the ability of the North American Jewish community to remain a strong, viable one. Will many of our grandchildren and their children still be Jewish?

It may be surprising to know that many Jewish leaders in Israel and North America have the same concerns about continuity in Israel. Israel today is very strong and secure militarily and with G-d's help and the Israel Defence Force, it has the ability to defend itself against possible and unnecessary aggression. However, I have a concern that the majority of boys and girls in Israel are growing up without any knowledge of what Judaism is all about.

The Jewish people have survived under all kinds of conditions in the Diaspora. Many Israelis used to think that living in Israel itself guarantees that Judaism will remain a distinct way of life. This has proven not to be true. One of the reasons so many Israelis have left is that they have seen nothing unique enough about Judaism to make them live in a hostile environment.

One of the reasons for the concern about continuity is the rising incidence of intermarriage, which in the United States has reached 52 per cent. We have always been proud that Toronto and Canadian communities are "backward" in certain respects and do not have the same statistics for intermarriage, divorce and synagogue attendance. However, we are catching up and we must take measures to prevent this from happening.

The movement to ensure continuity has begun with the leadership of Jewish communities throughout North America. The Task Force in Toronto offered some very practical, concrete proposals. The federation will furnish you with a copy of the recommendations. Nevertheless, these recommendations can only be implemented when individual Jewish families take the problem seriously. Otherwise they run the risk of merely being motherhood issues to which we all pay lip-service.

What are these suggestions? More day school education, trips to Israel, programs for teenagers and young adults. How do we translate these into something that will have real validity?

The best answer is that we should work from strength. The Jewish parents of Toronto make sure that a large percentage of our girls and boys do receive Jewish education in day, supplementary and afternoon schools. How can their education have a permanent influence on our lives? I am not suggesting anything startling or innovative because, for close to 2,000 years in the Diaspora, despite so much persecution, there was no problem with continuity. Why is it that in the free society of North America we should be concerned that the Jewish population will diminish instead of increase, as logic would suggest?

Continuity will take place if parents realize that when it comes to the observance of Jewish life (and everything else), they, not the Hebrew school staff, are the real teachers of their children. The Hebrew word for parents is horim, (guides) similar to the Hebrew for teachers morim. How many Jewish parents belong to a synagogue but never come on Shabbat unless there is a simchah to which they are invited? Since when do we need a special invitation to go to shul? Why should children attend regularly after their bar-bat mitzvot, since they imitate their parents?

While the Jewish community organizations first expressed concern about continuity in North America, it will happen only if individual families strengthen their commitments. While this may sound simplistic, continuity is directly related to the entire family's going to the synagogue on Shabbat and festivals, and every day, as well as ongoing participation in Jewish activities in and out of the home.

In Israel itself, the educational system that the majority of students go to must enhance its curriculum to provide more knowledge of the Bible, Talmud and important historical figures in Jewish life. We are a unique people which has ensured our own continuity as well as making great contributions to the outside world in the fields of medicine, science and commerce. This has to be stressed in the "public school" system of Israel and Hebrew schools in the Diaspora.

The application of knowledge must remain inherent in Jewish life. Hopefully, with a better understanding of the real roles of Jewish families, all of us can become optimistic about the physical and spiritual continuity of the people of Israel there and everywhere.

Rabbi Kelman is the spiritual leader of Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue in Toronto.

Law students hear discussion on school funding

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Neither a seasoned American lawyer nor a naive, young school girl can understand how one Canadian religious group merits government support for its schools while others do not.

Both believe the situation is "blatantly unjust," said lawyer Ed Morgan, whose daughter and father-in-law were the observers in question.

Nevertheless, many Toronto lawyers believe challenging that longstanding practice "runs against the grain of Canadian constitutional case law," he said.

Morgan is hoping to change all that. Along with John Laskin, who has since been appointed to the Ontario Court of Appeal, Morgan represented five parents with children in Jewish day schools who challenged Ontario's practice of funding Roman Catholic schools while denying similar funding to Jewish schools.

The parents, whose challenge is known as the Adler case, were supported by Canadian Jewish Congress. Although they lost at trial and on appeal, the parents are seeking leave to appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Speaking at an annual conference organized by the Canadian Jewish Law Students Association (CJLSA), Morgan said his father-in-law, the American lawyer, "just can't understand how we lost the case."

Robert Charney, a constitutional law specialist in the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General, acknowledged that "at some level we recognize there is a fundamental unfairness where one group gets funding and another does not."

However, Canada's constitution takes priority over that belief, he said.

Charney, who argued the Adler case for the government, said extending funding to Jewish and other religious schools would mark a fundamental change in the way society is organized.

If full funding was granted, other groups, including Sikhs, Muslims, Hindus and Protestants, would seek government support for their schools. "It would be naive to say the public school system would not be affected," he said.

Charney pointed to the Jewish community's longstanding opposition to prayer and religious instruction in public schools. If full funding were granted to Protestant schools (a group of Protestant parents have joined the Jewish parents' challenge), some rural school boards may choose to transform their schools into Protestant religious schools. Where would that leave Jews and other minorities who have no alternative educational facility?, he asked.

The panel discussion was chaired by Prof. Lorraine Weinrib of the University of Toronto.

It was part of a three-day CJLSA conference attended by about 85 students from as far west as British Columbia.

RRSP Foreign Content Eligible

A State of Israel Zero Coupon Bond is the best way to benefit from the dynamic economic growth of Israel while bringing foreign diversification to your self-directed RRSP.

Since 1951, Israel has issued over $15 billion (U.S.) in bonds. Israel has never defaulted or delayed on the repayment of interest or principal.

Today, the prospects for State of Israel Bonds are even better. Standard and Poor recently upgraded the nation's rating to BBB+. Israel is already an economic powerhouse; a leading supplier to the world of high tech and biotechnology products. Israel was a key participant at the recent Middle East/North Africa Economic Summit which laid the groundwork for a comprehensive peace and new business partnerships in the region. At peace, Israel will be the financial engine of an economically vibrant Middle East free-trade zone.

Zero Coupon Bonds are an ideal RRSP investment because they compound at a predetermined rate. With an effective yield of 8.25%, Israel's highly competitive Zero Coupon Bond will more than double your investment in just nine years. And the investment in U.S. dollars gives you a hedge against inflation.

Investing in Israel Bonds is the best way to encourage and benefit from the growth of Israel. And they add strength and diversity to any self-directed RRSP.

It's easy to establish a Self-Directed RRSP and add State of Israel Zero Coupon Bonds. For complete information, contact Canada-Israel Securities Ltd.

Rabbi outlines spouses' halachic obligations

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Orthodox woman of the 1990s confronted halachic interpretations of obligations between spouses, at a shiur given last week by Rabbi Hershel Schachter, rosh kollel of Yeshiva University.

Rabbi Schachter was giving his fourth shiur of the day in a series to mark the inauguration of the second term of the Or Chaim Kollel Program. Other subjects covered during the day included how rabbis arrive at halachic decisons, and an "ask the rabbi" program.

The rabbi explained that husbands and wives have the obligation of showing respect to each other. A husband who beats his wife, for instance, is cursed.

A husband is obligated to provide his wife with new clothes, jewelry or other such luxuries if she wants them (and if he can afford them). As well, he said, if the wife's standard of living or way of life was higher than his family's, he is obligated to maintain her situation.

Several women in the audience took issue with the examples Rabbi Schachter used, and with the detailed questioning by several male members of the audience.

Rebecca Rotenberg Nadler noted that with Orthodox women being more educated, both Jewishly and secularly, they might prefer the opportunity for spiritual and educational growth, rather than such frivolous matters as clothes or jewelry.

"I object to the stereotyping of both the questioning and the presentation," she asserted.

Another woman questioned whether a woman might not appreciate help with the dishes or the children instead of presents.

A rather taken-aback Rabbi Schachter agreed that these women were correct.

"If a man is obligated to give his wife gifts, how much more so is he obligated to help her with her spiritual needs, and with her responsibilities in maintaining a Jewish home."

According to the Chumash, the rabbi said, a husband is obligated to "spend time with" his wife. While this is usually considered to refer to marital relations, it should be seen in its literal sense as well.

"Even if the wife has not (yet) been to the mikvah [and thus is unavailable for marital relations], he still has the obligation to spend time with her."

A husband is not allowed to change jobs, even if he will earn more money, if it will mean having less time to spend with his wife unless she gives her permission, Rabbi Schachter added.

Beit Lid bombings outrage Israelis

"A democratic state can't plant car bombs," says Netanya Mayor and reserve general Zvi Pollack. "Besides, force alone didn't stop the intifadah. But I understand this feeling. There is a sense of powerlessness, a need to do something."

That sense is reinforced by the repeated proclamations of security experts who say there is no way to prevent someone planning to blow himself up. Even countries without democratic governments – like Egypt and Algeria – have been unable to snuff out Islamic terrorism, they note.

"We'll just have to learn to live with it," says Hebrew University terrorism expert Ehud Sprinzak. "Terrorism is not a threat to the existence of the State of Israel. It is a threat to the security of individual Israelis. It is a psychological weapon. By allowing ourselves to feel fear we give in to it. Panic is a victory for the enemy."

Sprinzak urges increased awareness and resolve. "If we want to live here we have to accept that every year there will be 100 to 150 Israeli victims of terror. This is the reality of life in the Middle East."

But most Israelis refuse to accept such a bleak prognosis. "We can't live with that," says Yaron Avni, an ardent supporter of the Rabin government and the peace process.

Like many Israelis – including those who back the government – Avni is calling for action. "No people can accept such a situation. Would the Americans or Canadians learn to live with terror?" asks the dentist from Safed.

Avni's solution? "Deport the families of terrorists. Stop releasing Palestinian prisoners. And suspend the peace talks for a while.

"I don't say put an end to the peace talks," he adds quickly. "I think it's our only hope in the long term. But right now the Palestinians have to realize that they can't commit acts like this with impunity."

Avni's views are echoed by many Israelis badly shaken by Sunday's carnage. Calls for a "strong hand" and "harsher measures" have blurred the usually sharp distinctions between right and left in Israel.

"If you want to be a dove on peace, you have to be a hawk on security," proclaimed Tourism Minister Uzi Baram on Sunday.

Even Science Minister Shulamit Aloni, the outspoken leader of the left wing Meretz party, agreed wholeheartedly with the government's decision to suspend the planned release of additional Palestinian prisoners.

President Ezer Weizman's unprecedented call for a suspension of the peace talks with the PLO is also indicative of the deep malaise felt throughout the country.

Support for the agreement with the PLO has been dwindling for many months. But Sunday's attack dealt a powerful blow to even the most enthusiastic backers of the peace process.

"We were told there would be an end to terror and a separation of the two peoples," says Tel Aviv banker Noam Aran. "So far, I haven't seen either.

"I had hoped in the agreement with the PLO, but they haven't delivered. Even after the [Oct. 22] attack on Dizengoff Street I thought things would change. But they didn't. Now it's time for us to re-evaluate," he said shaking his head. "I can't go on living like this."

Terrorism expert Sprinzak says people like Aran have lost control. He accuses the public – and the president – of panicking.

But Aran doesn't think so. "No," he says quietly. "I think I have just sobered up to reality.

Cancer fails to keep senior from her goal

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Shortly after 70-year-old Miriam Merovitz finished the requirements for the BA she had dreamed of since she was 18, she was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer.

Too ill to attend the fall graduation ceremony at the University of Toronto (U of T), she recently received her BA in her daughter's Toronto home, at an event attended by friends and relatives, as well as by university officials, among them chancellor Rose Wolfe.

Merovitz, a former elementary school teacher, called getting her degree the "crowning point" of her life. As she received her degree, she said she thought of her father who had stressed the importance of education. "My dad would have been ecstatic."

Merovitz registered at U of T's Woodsworth College after moving here from Montreal 10 years ago, and took one or two English literature courses each year.

"I was walking around with a book under my arm all the time," she said. "As time went on, with getting older, it became more and more difficult, but I was getting closer to the goal, so I persevered with it."

After receiving her teaching certificate more than 50 years ago, Merovitz said she had "the hope and the dream that I would eventually get my degree."

She taught at two public schools in Montreal but was unable to get a teaching job in Nova Scotia when her fiance Walter Wexler was stationed at a military base there.

Merovitz married Wexler in 1945 and for 23 years they ran a commercial and advertising photography business in Montreal. Their daughter was born in 1952.

Work, family top priority

Although Merovitz wanted to go back to school and she did manage to take a few credits at Sir George Williams College (now Concordia University), work and family took priority.

Wexler died suddenly of a heart attack in 1968, at the age of 44, and Merovitz slumped into a two-year-long depression. After coming to terms with her young husband's death, she married Gordon Merovitz, a retired widower with five children, in 1973.

University was out of the question again, since her husband insisted on spending a great deal of time out of the country. The couple travelled extensively and lived in Florida four months out of each year. "There was no way he would consider anything else," said Merovitz. "He had worked hard like I did."

While in Montreal, Merovitz did volunteer work for Hadassah-WIZO, including a stint as the president of the Mount Carmel chapter, and she edited the Temple Beth Shalom bulletin.

Ten years ago Merovitz was hit with another personal tragedy when her second husband died. She packed her bags, left Montreal to join her daughter in Toronto and began a new life as a part-time U of T student.

Although she had completed her degree requirements by August of last year, she was looking forward to September classes and was enrolled in a Yiddish literature course at the university.

Merovitz's daughter, Cara Malen, said that after her mother was diagnosed with cancer, "her first reaction was, 'What about school?' "

"My diagnosis didn't deter me," Merovitz said. She took her books to the hospital with her, but found that her illness made studying impossible.

Merovitz said she hopes her story will be "an encouragement to any other lady or gentleman" who wants to get a university degree.

Miriam Merovitz (centre) received her BA at a special ceremony attended by Rose Wolfe (left), chancellor of University of Toronto, and Alex Waugh, vice-principal of Woodsworth College, U of T.

Israel hockey team to hold local tryouts

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Junior-aged hockey players are a dime a dozen in Canada, but in Israel, good-calibre skaters are as rare as a rainfall in the desert.

That's why, with an International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF) tournament looming, organizers are scouring Canadian rinks for players eligible to lace 'em up for Israel.

Canadian representatives of the Israel national junior team will hold a tryout camp on Jan. 28, from 9 to 10:30 p.m. at Ed Sackfield Arena (Bayview and 16th) in the hopes of finding players who can supplement the Israeli lineup.

They'll be looking for guys who can not only skate, shoot and handle the puck, but possess an even rarer quality — who also hold an Israeli passport or have a parent born in the Jewish state.

Oded Orgil, one of two representatives of the Israeli national junior team for North America, said only those born on Jan. 1, 1977 or later, are eligible for the team.

So far he knows of at least 16 skaters who have learned of the camp by word of mouth and are expected to attend. Two have played Midget AAA, and the others have skated for AA, A or juvenile teams in the Toronto area.

A member of Israel's senior national team, Orgil said he and Howard Binstock will put the players through a number of drills and a controlled scrimmage to determine their skill levels.

The Jan. 28 camp will likely be followed by further practices as the number of eligible players is pared down. Orgil said he has also been in touch with associates in Montreal who are beating the bushes for players there and he's spoken to others in Ottawa and New York who are doing the same.

Those selected in North America will likely make up one-third to one-half the junior squad. They're slated to join the Israeli-based members of the team for a training camp just prior to the actual tournament, which is scheduled for March 11-17 in Elektrenai, Lithuania. Costs of heading overseas will be borne by the Israeli junior program.

The event will mark Israel's first-ever participation in a world junior tournament. Held under the auspices of the IIHF, the tournament's full designation is the tongue-twisting, European Junior Ice Hockey Championship 1995, Pool C Group 2.

Adding to the complexity of the nomenclature is the fact that Group 2 has been further subdivided into two divisions. Group A includes Yugoslavia, the Netherlands and Bulgaria while group B includes Lithuania, Croatia, Turkey and Israel.

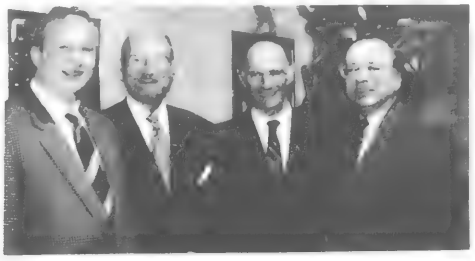
Teams will play a five-game round robin format with the winner being elevated to Group 1 of Pool C. Orgil acknowledges that the boys in blue and white will have a tough time against the powerhouse Lithuanians, but victories over Bulgaria, Croatia and Turkey are not inconceivable.

Mike Rubin, an oleh from Toronto who has skated for the national team, and Mark Talesnick, a native of Kingston who was an original member of the national squad, will coach the juniors.

One sabra skater with a good chance of cracking the lineup is Ran Oz, a strapping defenceman of Brett Lindros proportions who likes to hit and who plays for the Midget Marlies in Toronto.

While the North Americans will boost the calibre of the team, the Israeli-based coaches are busily trying to develop a good crop of sabra skaters right in their own backyard, Orgil said.

Anyone interested in trying out for the team or assisting it with financial or equipment donations can contact Orgil at either 416-369-2119 during the day or 905-881-3597 in the evening.



LEADERSHIP PLAQUE UNVEILED

Mount Sinai Hospital (MSH) recently unveiled the new Leadership Sinai plaque recognizing its members. At the unveiling (from left) Miles Nadal, founding chair, Leadership Sinai; Lloyd Fogler, chairman of the board MSH; Bernard Ghert, chairman of the board, MSH Foundation; Theodore Freedman, president and CEO. Leadership Sinai was formed to encourage the commitment of young people who wish to play a leadership role in supporting the hospital and its Samuel Lunenfeld Research Institute.

Para-chaplaincy program is launched by JF&CS

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — You've heard of paramedics and paralegals. Now get ready for para-chaplains.

Jewish Family & Child Service (JF&CS) is looking for a few good, sensitive people to enter a seven-week training program that will produce a new breed of community volunteer.

A para-chaplain, explains JF&CS staff chaplain Rabbi Ronald Weiss, is a lay person who will have "a solid grounding" in skills needed to deliver pastoral counselling to hospital and nursing home patients, prison inmates and other institutionalized Jews.

"It's more than just being a friendly visitor," Rabbi Weiss told The CJN.

The program, thought to be the first of its kind in Canada, has met with success in several American cities, Rabbi Weiss pointed out.

It will be run independently of the Association of Jewish Chaplains of Ontario (AJCO), an ad hoc group of community rabbis who visit Jewish shut-ins.

But AJCO members will be involved in training para-chaplains.

So will officials of nursing homes, correctional facilities and hospitals.

More than anything, chaplaincy's paramount requirement is the ability to listen, and to listen sympathetically, Rabbi Weiss said.

The para-chaplains will be trained in listening and other communication skills, as well as in dealing with impairments, aged patients and issues facing prisoners.

Other areas to be covered will be religious observance; Jewish views on death and grieving; and the general dos and don'ts of counselling.

Dealing with non-Jewish staff at institutions will also be stressed.

The program will bring "a needed spark of Jewish warmth" to those who need it, Rabbi Weiss said.

Candidates for the program should be "serious and sensitive" and willing to devote a few hours a week to the task, he added. Between 12 and 16 applicants are hoped for.

Instructors will include Rabbi Weiss; Rabbi Norman Berlat, director of pastoral care at Baycrest Hospital; geriatric specialist Dr. Barry Goldlist; and Rabbi Larry Lander, a chaplain at the Whitby Psychiatric Centre.

Training sessions will be held on seven consecutive Monday evenings, beginning Feb. 6. For details, call Rabbi Weiss at 416-638-7800, ext. 217.

Netivei Ahava offers hope, aid to poor Arabs, Jews

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

JAFFA — A mixed Arab-Jewish neighborhood in southern Tel Aviv, one of the poorest in Israel, Jaffa is plagued by problems.

The unemployment rate is high; the welfare roll seems to be growing; the incidence of violence and abuse within families remains unchecked; crime is compounded by the profiliferation of drugs.

More often than not, the chief victims of these socio-economic conditions are vulnerable and impressionable children — Jewish and Arab.

Netivei Ahava: The Jewish-Arab Association for the Child and Family, an organization founded 12 years ago by volunteers, offers hope to such children and their families.

Known in English as Friendship's Way, Netivei Ahava provides after-school educational and social activities, nutritious meals and proper medical and dental care for children from troubled homes.

Netivei Ahava's coordinator, Motti Golan, claims it's the only outreach program of its kind in Israel.

Supported by the New Israel Fund, a Diaspora-based group, Netivei Ahava has gained recognition throughout Israel.

In 1988, the Marcus Ziv Prize, which is under the patronage of Israel's president, was conferred upon Netivei Ahava as the best Arab-Jewish program in the country.

Netivei Ahava is housed in a nondescript building in northern Jaffa, close to the Mediterranean Sea.

Five days a week, some 50 children, aged 6-12, are brought to its Neighorhood Home by van.

According to Golan, most have behavorial problems, usually caused by parents addicted to drugs or suffering from mental problems.

Jewish and Arab children use Netivei Ahava's facilities in Jaffa.

Some of the kids are even malnourished.

In a few cases, Netivei Ahava uses the courts to rescue children from unsuitable environments.

"For every child registered with us, five to six are on the waiting list," said Golan. "We take only children with whom we can work and whose parents participate."

The average day begins at 2 p.m., when the children and staff share a hot, well-balanced lunch, together like one big family.

Afterward, the children can rest, listen to a story or music on a Walkman, or play a wide variety of games.

There are classes in such basic subjects as Hebrew, Arabic and math, as well as enrichment courses in art and music. Trips throughout Israel are organized. For some, it's their only opportunity to see Israel.

Parents are required to meet with the staff to discuss their child's performance, and to pay a monthly $40 registration fee.

Neivei Ahava tries to plant the seeds of Arab-Jewish amity.

"We don't talk a lot about the meaning of peace," explained Golan. "We make peace by creating long lasting friendships between the children and by working to bring them to the same level. Equality is the path to coexistence."

Not surprisingly, Netivei Ahava's hired staff consists of both Jews and Arabs. Volunteers, who are recruited from Israel and abroad, teach, drive, do office work and shop.

The Israeli government and the municipality of Tel Aviv have made efforts to improve the quality of life in Jaffa, Golan said.

And while progress has been made, there is still a long way to go. Knowing this, Netivei Ahava carries on with its mission with the help of Jews in the Diaspora.

Tu b'Shevat celebrations held in Toronto

Children sing out loud

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The shining faces and sweet voices of 120 children carried the main message at a Tu b'Shevat celebration at Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue.

So much so that the overflow crowd of 600, many parents and grandparents among them, had no patience for an eight-minute video. The concert organizers decided to stop the video and let the Bialik and Associated school choirs, and the Ne'Imot choir, take over again.

The most popular number was the Bialik choir's version of Baten (Peanut), led by director Doron Ophir, a tribute to that often underestimated tree fruit.

"Starting tomorrow, three million trees will be planted in Israel, some of them on the border between Israel and Jordan, to symbolize the spirit of the times," said Brig.-Gen. Doron Kadmiel, Jewish National Fund shaliach.

Narrator Michael Rumack, introducing a medley of songs by the Ne'Imot choir paying homage to the bounty of Israel's land, recalled the time when he drove a tractor at Kibbutz Urim in northern Israel in early Spring: "A flock of storks signalled the arrival of Tu b'Shevat and they flew close to us, as if saying 'it's time for you to get working on the land.' "

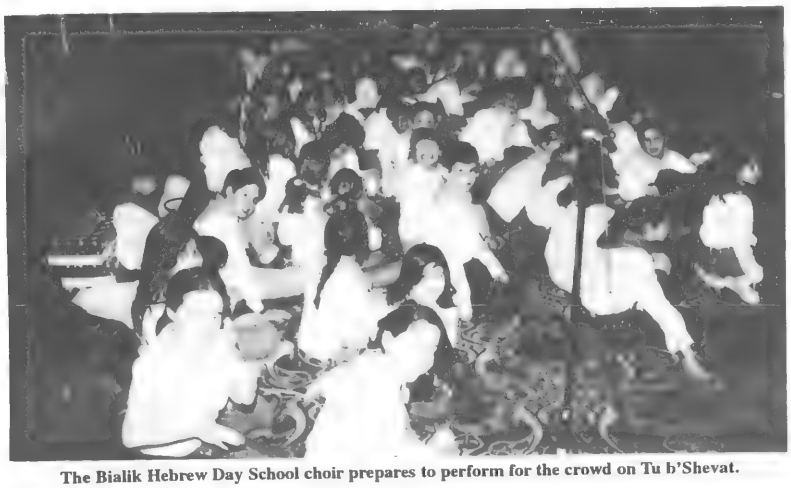
Picking up on this theme, the Ne'Imot chair, also directed by Ophir, sang such songs as Shiri li Od (Sing to Me My Land) and Eretz Zavat Chalav Udevash (Land of Milk and Honey).

In its second group, keyed to the peace theme, this choir of 20 men and women, about half of them Canadians from Israel, sang Eretz Shivot Haminim (Land of the Seven Species); Chalek Baolam (One World); and a medley of three songs, the children's choirs joining in for a rousing Oseh Shalom.

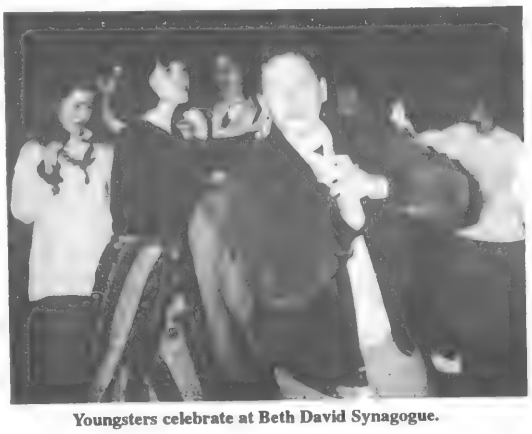
The Associated choir, directed by Yehudah Gilden, sang well known Tu b'Shevat songs such as Hashkadia Porachat (The Almond Tree is Flowering) and Kach Holchim (That's the Way We Go).

Celebrating Tu b'Shevat is a way for Jewish Canadians to strengthen their ties with Israel and to observe in an informal way a holiday that is relevant to Israel, said Rabbi Joseph Kelman.

Ben Prossin, JNF executive director, and Gigi Schaffel and Tom Ungar, co-chairs of the Tu b'Shevat JNF program took part. Marvin Rosenshein was master of ceremonies.



The Bialik Hebrew Day School choir prepares to perform for the crowd on Tu b'Shevat.



Youngsters celebrate at Beth David Synagogue.

Beth David festivities

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Youngsters from diverse groups within the Jewish community gathered at Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Synagogue for the fourth annual Tu b'Shevat celebration organized by the Israel Youth Program Centre (IYPC).

"This program represents a unique opportunity for Toronto's Jewish youth to ... come together to reaffirm your strong ties to the State of Israel," said Mark Rubinstein, IYPC coordinator.

Participant groups included Betar/Tagar (right-wing Zionist), Bnei Akiva (Orthodox), Canadian Young Judaea (Zionist), Habonim Dror and Hashomer Hatzair (both left-wing Zionist), Tsabar (Israeli Scouts), and United Synagogue Youth (Conservative).

"Tu b'Shevat is a day of youth," said Kurt Rothschild, president of the Canadian Zionist Federation (of which the IYPC is a project).

"In Israel on Tu b'Shevat thousands of schoolchildren plant thousands of little saplings. When you see the saplings grow into trees, that is a sign of youth and of the future," said Rothschild.

The Jewish National Fund (JNF) proclaimed the theme of Tu b'Shevat this year to be Trees for Peace, said Rubinstein.

Chassida David brought greetings on behalf of the JNF. "This year's celebration is particularly important," she said. "We celebrate peace and hope, and what is more appropriate a symbol than planting trees?"

Aaron Greenberg of Bnei Akiva recited the blessing for a symbolic tree planting.

After the formal part of the program, which included youth group presentations, local teacher and choreographer Rivka Atzmony led Israeli dancing.

Israel closes territories after bombing

Weizman urges suspension of peace talks

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The Israeli cabinet voted unanimously to seal off the Gaza Strip and West Bank following Sunday's suicide bombing at a crowded bus stop near the coastal city of Netanya.

And the attack prompted President Ezer Weizman, whose post is largely ceremonial, to step into the political arena with a call to postpone Israel's ongoing negotiations with the Palestinians.

"I believe we should now suspend the talks — not stop them, but suspend them — and tell him [Palestinian Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat] to make a bigger effort" to end terrorist attacks against Israelis, Weizman told Israel Television.

At least 19 people were killed, most of them soldiers, and more than 60 wounded when two explosions took place at a snack bar near the bus stop.

"I started running in the direction of the explosion to see what happened. I saw some people lying on the ground," eyewitness David Sachor told Israel Radio. "Then there was a second explosion, two minutes after the first one."

The Islamic Jihad movement, which militantly opposes the Israeli-Palestinian peace initiative, took responsibility for the 9:20 a.m. attack.

The group said from Damascus that the attack involved two terrorists from Gaza. But authorities said it was still unclear whether two suicide bombers carried out the attack, or if just one terrorist with explosives strapped to his body set off the first bomb and then blew himself up in the second, larger explosion.

The Beit Lid intersection between Netanya and the West Bank town of Tulkarm was crowded with troops en route to their bases after a free weekend.

Of the 14 dead positively identified by Monday, two were civilians.

Some 46 of the 62 people who were wounded were still in nearby hospitals Sunday night. Of those, 14 were said to be in serious condition.

The bombing was the bloodiest terror attack in Israel since a suicide bomber killed 22 people aboard a Tel Aviv bus last Oct. 22.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who arrived at the scene with Police Minister Moshe Shahal, called the attack another attempt by Muslim extremist terror groups to undermine the peace process.

"There are no words to describe the atrocity that was carried out at the Beit Lid junction," Rabin said.

Angry Israeli demonstrators greeted the prime minister with shouts of "Rabin the Traitor" and "Death to Arabs."

Rescue teams evacuated the wounded to nearby hospitals in Netanya, Kfar Saba and Hadera. Some serious cases were flown to Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem.

Medical teams, members of the army rabbinate and the chevra kadisha spent much of Sunday sifting through the debris, collecting disembodied limbs and flesh for examination and burial.

Cranes were brought in for workers to search for body parts strewn in nearby trees.

After cutting short their regular cabinet session earlier in the day, government ministers reconvened in the evening to discuss what measures should be taken in the wake of the attack.

Many called for a reassessment of current security measures, but most also reiterated that the peace process must not be halted.

The closure of the Gaza Strip and West Bank means Palestinians from the territories cannot enter Israel unless for special medical or other humanitarian reasons, cutting off tens of thousands from jobs in Israel.

Reacting to the attack, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres disagreed with Weizman's call for postponing peace talks.

"It is clearly a further strain on the peace process, but this is not a reason to stop the peace process to satisfy the attempts of the people who want to assassinate the peace process," Peres told Israel Radio.

Shahal was expected to renew his call for stationing additional police at roadblocks between Israel and the territories, and at bus stations like the one at Beit Lid, where an army unit had been operating to ensure security.

Palestinian officials condemned the attack in the name of Arafat, who did not, however, speak publicly about the attack.

Dr. Ahmed Tibi, an Israeli Arab adviser to Arafat, issued a statement saying Arafat condemned the attack.

Likud opposition leader Benjamin Netanyahu said the attack proved the government's weakness and its failure to combat terror.

The attack drew swift condemnation from President Clinton, who said, "once again, the enemies of peace have struck down innocent people in an evil effort to destroy the hopes of peaceful coexistence between Israelis and Arabs."

'The most atrocious sight I've seen'

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

BEIT LID — A few hours after the dead and wounded had been evacuated, Noam, a soldier who borrowed a cellular phone to reassure his mother he had not been hurt in the attack, was still red-faced and trembling from what he had just witnessed at the Beit Lid bus depot.

"Mom, I'm okay, I'm alive," he said, trying not to cry. "Nothing happened to me. Really. I'm all in one piece."

Meanwhile, a chevra kadisha body-identification unit — equipped with plastic bags, rubber gloves, cotton balls and paint scrapers — set about the grim job of collecting torn flesh, organs and other body parts.

It was a scene reminiscent of October's bombing on Tel Aviv's Dizengoff Street. But unlike the urban setting in that incident, here the only building destroyed was the small kiosk that served soldiers in transit.

Kiosk owner Bella Zioni, who was lightly injured in the attack, said at first she thought the blast was an electrical short circuit. "Then everything collapsed and I thought I was going to die," she said.

Amos Halfon was driving through the area when the explosions occurred.

After the first blast, he said he got out of his car to help the wounded soldiers, and then heard the second blast. "It was the most atrocious sight I have ever seen, bodies flying in the air," he said.

Taxi driver Baruch Fichman was sitting in his car with a friend near the kiosk when they heard a massive blast. Fichman, who was only lightly injured, ducked and "shouted to my friend, but he couldn't hear me. The blast affected his eardrums," he said. "I was just getting up when suddenly there was another blast."

The stone kiosk collapsed, said one man. [It was] "like a slaughterhouse. People were butchered, like pieces of meat."

Other eyewitnesses described body parts flying in the air and organs strewn in the middle and at the sides of the road.

Shaul Avner, 38, was a passenger on the bus from Netanya to the nearby Kfar Yona when the bombs exploded.

"We reached the junction at 9:20 a.m. and suddenly heard an almighty blast," he said. "Then a minute later, another blast. Body parts were flying, hands legs, heads. Cars were on fire. I never saw such carnage. I'm still in shock."

At around 1 p.m., a bundle of blood-stained clothes were still piled by the roadside.

Small crowds of residents from Kfar Yona and other nearby moshavim arrived and shouted anti-government slogans.

"Death to Arabs," they screamed. "Death to Rabin. He's to blame. And the leftist press. Our blood is being spilled and these bleeding hearts carry on talking to these Arab butchers."

"Okay, so you tell me," shouted one man. "How did this murderer manage to kill a bunch of soldiers? There's no security here. No one is safe."

Bone marrow clinic held in Israel

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

Jay Feinberg

JERUSALEM — On a stormy night last week, Monique Schwartzman, an Orthodox Jew from the settlement of Betar, put her two infants in the car and drove to Jerusalem for a blood test.

Azat Jaber, an Israeli Arab paramedic, who had just rescued passengers from an overturned Egged bus, took a sample of Schwartzman's blood.

And David Levine, an American immigrant, made sure the sample got on a plane three hours later.

Schwartzman, Jaber and Levine are three of the more than 1,300 people who assembled in a Jerusalem hotel last week to try to save the life of Jay Feinberg.

They came for a bone marrow drive — a last-ditch effort to find a match for Feinberg, the 26-year-old New Jersey resident who was diagnosed with leukemia three years ago. Doctors say Feinberg has only a short time to live unless he finds a compatible donor for a bone marrow transplant.

The drive was spearheaded by Canadian students and young immigrants. It was organized by Yavneh Olami, the world organization of religious students and b'nei yeshivot, encouraged by three Torontonians now in Israel: Talia Meister and Moriah Shamian, both spending a year at Jerusalem's Midreshet Lindenbaum; and Miriam Levenstein, who lives and studies in Israel.

They decided to launch the drive partly out of gratitude. All three are friends of Audey Stanleigh, the 19-year-old Toronto student who was diagnosed with leukemia last year. Stanleigh survived thanks to a marrow match found among the 50,000 people who were tested in previous drives for Jay Feinberg.

Others have also found a match through those tests, the results of which are recorded in an international bone marrow registry.

"Jay has helped save so many people. We want to help save him," explained 17-year-old Meister, who together with Shamian and Levenstein approached Yavneh Olami with the idea.

"Yavneh Olami has contacts with over a dozen yeshivot and one-year-programs in Israel," explained the organization's director Rabbi Maury Kelman, a 20-year-old immigrant, also from Toronto. "We used those contacts to recruit people to undergo blood tests, raise funds and volunteer their time."

The response was overwhelming. Through a grassroots fundraising effort that included door-to-door soliciting, students raised $30,000 (US) in two months. That's only $10,000 short of the money needed to cover the cost of the 1,300 blood tests.

The drive was run by dozens of young volunteers from Canada, the United States, Great Britain, Australia and Israel. "We have almost too many helpers," said Shamian. "People feel it's not enough to give their blood and their money. They want to do more."

While the majority of volunteers were English-speaking students, they were not the only ones.

Avraham, an Orthodox Jew born in Jerusalem, was one of the Magen David Adom volunteers conducting blood tests. "Saving a life is one of the most important mitzvot in the Torah," he said.

Next to him sat Jaber, a first aid instructor and paramedic, from the Arab village of Abu Ghosh. "I will be very happy if I have played a small part in saving someone's life," said Jaber, who had to leave his station when he was summoned to a road accident. After treating the injured, Jaber returned to his post at the Friends of Jay drive.

Schwartzman, the mother from Betar, heard about the drive from her husband, a yeshivah student. "At first I felt it would be too difficult to take my young children to Jerusalem at night," said Schwartzman, a Belgian-born immigrant. "But then I thought to myself: 'What if I am the one? What if I could have saved a life?' "

The 1,300 blood samples were flown to the United States and ushered from Kennedy Airport to La Guardia by police escort. The North Carolina lab where they are being analyzed should have the results within a few days.

"We all pray that we will be able to save Jay's life — and maybe the lives of others in need of a transplant," said Kelman. "There is no better cause than that."

Gingrich favors moving embassy to Jerusalem

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — U.S. House of Representatives Speaker Newt Gingrich says he would strongly support the transfer of the U.S. embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem if and when the issue comes to the floor of the House.

In an interview last week with the Israeli daily Ha'aretz, Gingrich said it is Israel's right to determine where its capital should be and it is the United States' duty, as Israel's ally, to accept that and act accordingly.

Gingrich added that this has been his position for more than a decade, implying there was no question of his having recently adopted the stance on Jerusalem in order to curry favor with Jewish voters at home.

In his interview with reporter Akiva Eldar, Gingrich displayed detailed knowledge of Middle East issues. A portion of the interview aired last Sunday night on Israeli television.

On the deployment of American peacekeeping troops to the Golan Heights as part of an eventual Israeli-Syrian peace treaty, Gingrich said he tended to support the idea. But he said his support would come only after a careful examination and debate of all the possible scenarios, including the worst-case scenario of a war breaking out between Israel and Syria.

Gingrich cited the successful experience of American personnel stationed in the Sinai to enforce the 1979 Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

But in considering the Golan, Gingrich said, Americans would be asking two questions: the threat of terror attacks, particularly in light of the September 1983 suicide car bombing of a U.S. Marine base near Beirut that killed 241 American soldiers; and the way events might unfold in case of a military escalation in the region.

Gingrich also stressed the dangers posed by Iran — both as a source and supporter of international terror and as a country bent on attaining nuclear weapons.

Indeed, the speaker said that peace with Syria was important in order for the world to focus on the dangers emanating from Tehran.

"I would put that at the head of the list of problems that the U.S. needs to resolve," Gingrich said, referring to the Iranian threat.

On foreign aid, Gingrich said it was hard for him to see why the United States would want to help Syria.

Jews in Japan escape quake's devastation

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — The tiny Jewish community of Kobe managed to escape serious harm from the devastating earthquake that struck western Japan last week.

"It was just lucky, that's all," said Simon Elimalah, the president of the Kobe synagogue.

While no one among the community's 30 families was seriously injured, at least one family lost its home, and several other homes and businesses sustained serious damage, he said.

The Ohel Shelomoh synagogue itself, built in 1970, suffered minor damage. The marble tablets depicting the Ten Commandments were shattered.

"The earthquake was very selective," said Rabbi James Lebeau of Tokyo, who spoke to members of the Kobe Jewish community last week.

There are only two synagogues in Japan, the rabbi said: one in Tokyo, with about 150 member families, and the one in Kobe. The Kobe shul does not have its own rabbi.

There are some 1,500 to 2,000 Jews currently living in Japan.

Despite the relative good fortune of the Jewish community, Kobe's Elimalah described the scene there as horrific.

"It looks like after World War II," he said. "Food is hard to get, gasoline is hard to get, and it's still going on."

At least 5,000 people were killed and 21,000 injured in the earthquake, which struck the city of 1.4 million early in the morning of Jan. 17. It was the worst earthquake to hit Japan since 1923.

Both the Tokyo and Kobe synagogues have begun raising funds to aid victims of the quake.

Several American Jewish organizations have also started relief efforts. They include the American Jewish World Service, B'nai B'rith International, the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.

The relief efforts being organized by American Jewish groups, which will include medical supplies and financial support, will be distributed to Jews and non-Jews alike.

The Week in Israel

Jan. 16:

• Jewish settlers urged the government to beef up security in Hebron after an unarmed anti-tank rocket slammed into a Jewish home there. The army suspected that Palestinians had fired the rocket, which tore through an apartment. There were no reported injuries.

• Israel and Jordan agreed in principle to build two new rail lines linking the two countries. One line will run from Haifa to the Jordanian city of Irbid, the other from the Dead Sea to the Red Sea. Both will be used primarily to transport cargo.

Jan. 17:

• Israel offered Japan its army's dog-assisted rescue unit to look for survivors buried under the rubble of last week's massive earthquake near Kobe.

• British Prime Minister John Major announced that he will visit Israel in March, a London spokesperson said. Further details were not available.

• One pilot was killed and another slightly injured when two Air Force F-16 jets collided in mid-air during training over the sea south-west of Tel Aviv. Human error, compounded by poor visibility, is thought to have caused the mishap.

Jan. 18:

• Family members and friends were on hand at Ben-Gurion Airport to greet the 28 returning Israeli police officers who have been part of the UN peacekeeping mission in Haiti for three months.

Jan. 19:

• Israel and France established a security forum similar to the one that exists between Israel and the United States. The forum will be comprised of three working groups — security, military strategy and arms control — that will meet periodically.

Jan. 20

• An IDF convoy was ambushed in southern Lebanon by the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine - General Command. Seven terrorists were killed; there were no IDF casualties.

• Israel government officials announced that a special Israeli-Jordanian trade committee will meet in Eilat to complete a comprehensive trade agreement.

• The Intercontinental Hotel chain announced that it will enter the Israeli market and open three new hotels in the country in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem and Eilat.

Chechen Jews flee turmoil

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service and Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Sixteen more Jews fleeing the brutal fighting in the breakaway Russian republic of Chechnya arrived in Israel last Tuesday on a flight organized by the Jewish Agency.

Agency officials said seven of the refugees had fled the Chechen capital of Grozny while it was under heavy bombardment from Russian forces. The rest came from Nalchik, a Russian town about 160 km east of Grozny, where they had been evacuated by the Agency earlier.

Two brothers, aged four and six, were among the arrivals. As they entered Ben-Gurion Airport, they carried toy rifles, "so no one can hurt us."

Oksana Kurbatshayna, 16, seemed in a state of shock as she told reporters how she had escaped from her home in Grozny. Her mother, she believes, was killed in the city more than three weeks ago.

"I asked a cousin to help me look for her, but there were piles of bodies strewn in the streets, with no one to bury them, and we didn't know where to start looking," she said through an interpreter as she stepped off the Aeroflot flight.

Oksana could not hide her distress as she told how she hitched rides from Grozny until she reached Nalchik, near the northern border. There, she was helped by Jewish Agency officials and given clothing, food and documents.

At one stage in her journey, she said, she walked 15 km in snow and freezing conditions. "Kind people," she added, gave her food and clothing.

Haim Chesler, head of the Agency's activities in the former Soviet Union, said he met Oksana in Nalchik and promised they would meet again, "sooner than you think."

Chesler said he estimated that around 12 Jewish families are still in Grozny and between 50 and 100 refugees in Nalchik. Last month, 32 Chechen Jews arrived in Israel. In December, 25 were flown to the Jewish state.

The Agency is doing "everything possible" to help with their emigration. Some, though, still live in hope that the fighting will end, said Chesler.

Over the last few days, Chechen Jews have been wounded in the carnage, and Chesler said the next rescue flight may come with wounded refugees.

At the airport, the group of immigrants, carrying possessions they had managed to salvage in plastic bags and boxes, looked exhausted and bewildered, but most said they were happy to be here.

Igor Timachenko, 35, a bus driver, arrived with his wife and two daughters.

"Now we can start to feel alive again," he said. "I just want to find a job and live normally."

CHAIR, BOARD OF INQUIRY
(under the Human Rights Code)

The Government of Ontario is committed to fairness and equity throughout the province. The Human Rights Code provides protection from discrimination in areas of employment, services, contracts and accommodation.

As part of the Government's continued commitment to the effective use of resources and enhanced customer service, recent amendments to the Human Rights Code provide for the establishment of an independent standing Board of Inquiry to hear and decide matters referred to it under its mandate.

We seek an exceptional leader to chair the Board of Inquiry and to guide the transition to its new status. Candidates must have experience in adjudication and administrative law as well as knowledge of mediation principles and practices. A sound knowledge of equality issues is essential. Knowledge of the Human Rights Code and related legislation is necessary.

Sound judgment is critical, as decisions will continue to set the jurisprudence in this complex area of administrative law. Excellent communication, writing skills and decision-making and management skills are required.

This important opportunity will appeal to individuals who have demonstrated a commitment to fairness, social justice, equity and access issues. Appointment is by Order-in-Council for an initial three-year term.

In accordance with our employment equity goals, applications for this full-time position are particularly encouraged from aboriginal peoples, francophones, persons with disabilities, racial minorities and women. Echoes of Auschwitz seen in terror attack

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the liberation of the Auschwitz death camp took place in Israel on Sunday, hours after a terrorist attack in the centre of the country claimed at least 19 lives.

At a service at the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial in Jerusalem, Education Minister Amnon Rubinstein filled in for Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who was visiting the scene of the attack in Netanya.

Rabin's message tied the past and present. "Today once again, monsters in human form have tried to destroy us and the chance for peace. To our enemies we say one thousand attacks will not make us surrender. We will continue to build our home here. We have no other."

A railway freight car used by the Nazis to transport Jews was put on display as a memorial to the deportations. The railway car was given to Israel by the Polish government, and designed into a monument by architect Moshe Safdie.

Dr. Samuel Pisar, chairman of the Friends of Yad Vashem in France, told Israel Television that "even today, maybe we are hearing echoes, explosions, of Auschwitz in our midst."

Approximately 1.5 million Jews were murdered in Auschwitz.

One survivor told Israel Radio she hoped the memorial will be a message for future generations to "not forget the suffering of those who survived and kept holy the memory of those who did not. We have tried to survive with all our strength in order to tell what happened to our people."

A gathering of thousands of Holocaust survivors was later held in the Jerusalem International Convention Centre. Survivors inscribed their names and tattoo numbers in a special book and received a special medal. Booths were set up to help relatives and friends relocate each other.

Last week members of the Hungarian government joined the local Jewish community to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the liberation of the Budapest ghetto by Soviet troops. In below-zero temperatures, some 100 people gathered at the entrance to the former Budapest ghetto to attend the commemoration.

Bickering Israeli cabinet approves spending cuts

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — A divided Israeli cabinet last week approved a $239 million (US) cut in government spending aimed at covering planned tax reforms.

But the cabinet's decision was overshadowed by intense bickering among government ministers before the cut was approved.

The infighting led Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to warn that he would invoke his "full authority" against ministers who did not act "in a civil fashion" toward one another.

Rabin's remarks came in the wake of a scathing memo he received from Police Minister Moshe Shahal, in which Shahal sharply criticized Finance Minister Avraham Shohat's performance.

Reports about the memo, which was leaked to the media, were given prominent play in the Israeli press.

In the memo, Shahal was quoted as saying the country was "hurtling full speed toward an economic disaster."

Last Sunday's cabinet session was designed to ease friction among the ministers, who have been sparring publicly since the budget cut was proposed last week.

But the session became overheated, with Shohat calling Shahal a "liar," and a "saboteur of the government."

Shohat also accused Shahal of writing the memo to serve his own aspirations of becoming finance minister.

Shahal in turn denied the allegations, saying he had no interest in obtaining Shohat's portfolio.

He also said he had "no regrets" about the memo, which he said included nothing he had not already stated openly in cabinet.

The cabinet ultimately passed the spending-cut plan, with 10 ministers voting in favor and seven against.

The budget reduction will enable the government to reduce the employers health tax by nearly two percentage points. It also provides working women with an additional tax credit to offset higher health taxes.

The budget reforms, approved only two weeks after the Knesset passed its $49 billion annual budget for 1995, amount to less than one-half per cent of the total budget.

Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel welcomed the cabinet decision, but said it was not enough.

"I think the changes are in the right direction," he told Israel Television. "I would like to see them in a larger magnitude about three times as much as what was adopted.

"I think our tax burden has gone up significantly in the past few years, and it's essential to see its reversal," Frenkel said.

The government, which has seen its popularity fall as inflation rates rose, could take little comfort from the latest inflation figures, released by the Central Bureau of Statistics.

According to the bureau's figures, inflation in 1994 stood at 14.5 per cent nearly double the government's projections for the year.

El Al purchases two cargo planes

MONTREAL — El Al Israel Airlines has announced the purchase of two Boeing 747-200F cargo aircraft from GE Capital Services.

Both aircraft are equipped with nose and side cargo doors and were owned by Singapore Airlines until their purchase by GE. The value of the purchase agreement is $100 million (US).

The two cargo aircraft, each capable of uplifting 120 tonnes of freight, will improve El Al's cargo services to Israel exporters and importers en route to Europe and North America.

El Al is currently studying various options regarding the operation of special cargo flights to Asia. The company operates passenger flights with belly cargo facilities to Beijing, Hong Kong, Bombay and New Delhi.

Tips to succeed in business

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Flexibility and self-confidence are two major factors behind the success of a business said a panel of four entrepreneurs.

"Business people must not be afraid to change. When you stay the same you are in trouble," said Judy Sarick, owner of the Children's Bookstore.

Sarick was part of the recent panel, sponsored by United Jewish Appeal Women's Network and entitled Doing Good, Having Fun, Achieving Success. Other panel members were Robin Kay, Robin Kay Clothing; Janet Rosenberg, Janet Rosenberg and Associates and Barbie Casselman, Casselman and Company. Moderator was Bernice Miedzinski.

Rosenberg, a landscape architect who opened her own practice in 1981, said if factors dictate, entrepreneurs must be willing to do business in a different way. She said that when she felt uncomfortable with 12 people in her office, she downsized it to five people "who are all committed to a fine level of design work. I also learned that it does not matter if something goes wrong as long as we talk it over and not let it happen again."

Kay, who has 12 stores specializing in cotton knit sweaters, said it is essential for business people to believe in what they are doing. "You have to believe and if you are lucky, people will support you in your beliefs. All you've got is that gal in the mirror."

Missionary zeal

Sarick opened her first store in 1974 because she believed that children need to own their own books. "I had no expectations of making money but I went into the business with missionary zeal. Toronto has more children's book stores than any other city but it is a challenge to stay ahead of the competition."

Casselman, a nutritionist, opened a downtown weight-loss practice in 1985 after working at a weight-loss centre for six years. "I began dissecting the weight-loss business and looked at ways of improving it. When clients in the clinic began asking for me I believed that I had an aptitude for what I was doing.

"In the summer of 1991 I met with Dave Nicolls of Loblaws who needed a spokesperson for his Too Good To Be True line of low fat foods. This gave me exposure and was one of the most significant moves of my career. Things can mushroom if you do a little planning and I planned carefully for each step."

Asked how each panelist weathered the recession, Casselman said she was not affected because, although people may not have had money to spend on cars, vacations and houses, they did have some to spend on themselves.

"People knew that, especially in hard times, they had to look good and feel good," she said.

Kay said an important part of her business philosophy, with or without the recession, is to give the best service and highest quality. "Then customers feel good and this helped us overcome the recession."

This week The CJN Features Shalom Judaica

By SYLVIA PAPERNICK
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Shalom Judaica Gift Shop owners Israel and Esther Barak have assembled an impressive collection of Judaica in a beautiful, gallery-like setting.

The only difference here, luckily, is that the pieces are for sale.

Originally from Haifa, Barak has operated a jewelry store at the Wilson and Bathurst location since 1972.

The success of a mail-order house he set up in the United States three years ago convinced him there was a larger market for Jewish and Israeli artists, and he opened Shalom Judaica last year.

Business has been good. Barak's prices are 20 per cent to 60 per cent lower than elsewhere because he says he sells in large quantities. A set of six compact wine glasses sells for $12.50. A challah cover by a graduate of the Israeli art school Betzalel is $48, considerably less than the $200 price tag in the United States.

There is a gift for every wallet, with prices ranging from $12 to $200. Only top Israeli artists are featured in the store — Karshi, Oppenheimer, or the manufacturing house of Neker Glass. Plaques and jewelry are designed by Barak himself.

He carries a large variety of mezuzot in sterling silver, metal, ceramic and hand-painted Jerusalem stone (the latter two crafted by Esther). Kosher scrolls from Israel are $35. There is an excellent selection of ketubot, challah covers, wine sets, menorahs and candlesticks. Shalom Judaica claims to have the largest variety of tallesim in Toronto, with 50 new styles expected shortly.

Decorative pieces for the house include the texts of Birkat HaBayit or Aishet Chayil in beautiful calligraphy, mounted on silk. Biblical reliefs in silver are delicately detailed by a former art professor from Leningrad and Moscow.

With Japan, China and India new to the Judaica market, Barak fervently believes in selling Israeli productions. "Israelis should find a way to fight and compete, not to give up business territory," he said.

Shalom Judaica is meeting the challenge. The Baraks are so confident about their prices that they will refund the difference plus 10 per cent if a customer finds anything for less elsewhere. "Quality for granted, prices assured," Barak said.

New writer a sell-out hit

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A talented new comedy writer has arrived on the Toronto scene in the person of Toronto playwright Ruth Biderman. Her first produced play, The Squeeze, drew sell-out crowds in its run to Jan. 22 at Tarragon Extra Space.

Biderman has crossed the line of trying to get money out of bureaucrats for subsidized community housing in real life to skewering them in this comedy. Holding a master's degree in public policy from York University, she worked for the Ontario Ministry of Transportation and in 1992 and 1993 she was administrator of the Housing Development Resource Centre, a non-profit agency.

So her jibes at politicians and government officials who want the public to believe that cutting back on social welfare programs is the panacea for the deficit are reality based.

If for nothing else, The Squeeze will go down in history as the first play to deliver full-blown on stage a government economist who uses bafflegab believably. The character is played convincingly by Hume Baugh who stumbles around the set when he can't find his glasses.

For Biderman, it's a case of laughing through her tears because she believes there is a real danger that the deficit bugaboo will result in taking money from the needy.

As she says in her program notes: "As they face the juggernaut of globalization our governments are failing us pitifully...it's tough to decide whether to see them as clowns or as sitting ducks."

Singing For Sarajevo: On Sunday Jan. 29, when Stockard Channing, Ariel Dorfman, Harvey Keitel, Vanessa Redgrave, Christopher Reeve, Susan Sontag and other celebrities perform a benefit in aid of the citizens of Sarajevo at the Union Square Theatre in New York, cantor Ronald Graner of Toronto will be among them on stage.

Graner has a degree in theatre and some experience in professional opera, and works as a real estate agent. He sang full-time as a cantor for a decade at various synagogues, including the Har-El Temple in Jerusalem, Congregation Beth Shalom in Edmonton, and Temple Emanu-El in Toronto. He still sings occasionally at Toronto's Temple Sinai. "Have tallis, will travel," is how he describes the calling of a freelance cantor.

He is participating in the Sarajevo benefit at the invitation of Redgrave, whom he met a couple of years ago when his daughter was an extra in one of her films. At the time, Graner gave her some information on a forgotten Jewish composer, David Nowakowsky (1848-1921), whose reputation Graner has been helping to rehabilitate since discovering him about four years ago. Redgrave was impressed and sang some Nowakowsky compositions at a benefit for World War II partisan fighters in London.

David Nowakowsky

"He was one of the most important Jewish composers of Eastern Europe," Graner says. "He invented a way of harmonizing Jewish liturgical music, which until then no one had succeeded in doing. It enabled composers who came after him to make things sound Jewish and still be harmonized."

The composer, who lived in Odessa, wrote thousands of liturgical and symphonic works in the style of Mendelssohn, but his music was lost for more than 75 years "as a result of war, revolutions and racial hatred," says Graner.

After Nowakowsky's death, a daughter and granddaughter, Sophia Selzman, smuggled the musical manuscripts out of Bolshevik Russia into Germany. Then Selzman, who became a pianist, escaped to Vichy France from Germany with the music just days before Kristallnacht. When the Germans invaded Vichy, the music was buried in metal ammunition cases.

A great-grandson of the composer retrieved the music and brought it to New York in 1953. Mislaid in an archives of Hebrew Union College, it was nearly destroyed in a fire in 1978. Since then, due to the efforts of Nowakowsky family members in California, about 150 compositions have been edited and published, and a few performed in public. Last New Year's Eve, Graner performed some Nowakowsky works as part of Toronto's First Night festivities.

Inspired by his lush and masterful romanticism, Graner calls Nowakowsky a "first-class international composer of classical music" and says the re-emergence of his oeuvre is "like discovering 10 new symphonies by Mendelssohn." He plays a tape over the telephone for this reporter, who briefly hears the rich, heartbreaking strains of a melancholic violin, sounding above a Brahmsian orchestra. "Isn't it wonderful? Let me fast forward to a little bit of the Kol Nidre — it's an orchestral version, it'll knock your socks off!"

As a real estate agent, Graner tends to specialize in "theatrical" properties. He recently sold the former CBC studio on Parliament Street near Carlton — from where such radio shows as Metro Morning and Morningside once emanated — to two dance companies, the Canadian Children's Dance Theatre and The Danny Grossman Company.

Scholars define anti-Semitism

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — A Toronto professor has recently published a stimulating anthology on anti-Semitism.

Approaches to Antisemitism: Context and Curriculum was edited by Prof. Michael Brown, the recently appointed director of the Centre for Jewish Studies at York Univertsity. It was published by the American Jewish Committee and the International Centre for University Teaching of Jewish Civilization.

The anthology presents contradictory views of anti-Semitism and how to teach about it.

Brown asked 26 contemporary scholars to define anti-Semitism. They discuss breaking down prejudice in the classroom and present historical studies on this complex topic.

Prof. Michael Brown

Although Approaches to Antisemitism offers fertile discussion topics for students and teachers on a number of levels, it is also of interest to those members of the Jewish and non-Jewish communities who search for answers.

The contributors represent six continents and a wide range of disciplines. "Their diversity and their disagreements, no less than their subject, should arouse the interest of anyone curious about the Jewish or university worlds," Brown said.

The seeds of the anthology were sown in the summer of 1991 at an interdisciplinary workshop on anti-Semitism held in Jerusalem. Brown was one of a number of Jewish and gentile participants from around the world.

He found few colleagues had ever taught a course on anti-Semitism, many feeling it would be "inappropriate" or "impolitic" to do so. That feeling, Brown said, resulted in short shrift to anti-Semitism in courses on racism and prejudice.

Brown is the author of Jew or Juif: Jews, French Canadians, and Anglo-Canadians, 1759-1914 (James Publication Society, Philadelphia, 1986). He is a contributor to numerous books and journals.

A Gathering of Angels: Angels in Jewish Life & Literature, by Morris B. Margolis, Ballentine $16.95 (paperbound).

Suddenly, inexplicably, North Americans have become infatuated with the idea of angels.

In recent years a spate of books about angels have appeared, not to mention cards, calenders and gift items. Billy Graham's Angels: God's Secret Agents has sold over 1½ million copies. The hunger for information about angels, and whatever inspiration they provide, seems insatiable.

Now, Rabbi Morris B. Margolies, a professor of Jewish history at the University of Kansas, has compiled an engaging compendium of Jewish angelic lore from the Hebrew Bible, Talmud, Zohar, medieval literature and Chassidism. He also includes such modern writers as Kafka, Peretz and I. B. Singer.

Angels, God's messengers, abound in the Jewish tradition. They appear in a variety of memorable biblical visions: to Jacob, who sees them ascending and descending a ladder between heaven and earth; to Isaiah as six-winged seraphim; to Ezekiel in the likeness of our grotesque creatures; to Daniel around God's flaming throne where "thousand thousands ministered unto Him and 10,000 stood before Him"; and to Zachariah as "a man riding on a red horse."

Angels announce the birth of Ishmael, Isaac and Samson. They dine with Abraham, rescue the family of Lot from Sodom, succour Hagar and Ishmael in the wilderness, intervene in the sacrifice of Jacob, wrestle with Jacob, appear to Moses in a burning bush, lead the Israelites out of Egypt and through the wilderness, confront Balaam, feed and instruct Elijah, smite the Assyrians and protect Daniel in the lion's den and his companions in the fiery furnace.

Michael, referred to as "merciful and forbearing," emerges in Midrashic literature as the commander-in-chief of the entire angelic host, and the angel specifically assigned to be the guardian of Israel. He rescues Abraham from the fire of Nimrod, Jacob from the evil designs of Esau and the machinations of Laban, thwarts Haman's accusation against the Jews of Persia, "and at the end of humanity's long trial of tribulations he will defeat Samael-Satan in mortal combat, thus relegating the symbol of evil to oblivion."

What are modern Jews to make of angels? Is it possible to believe in such beings? Does God really need messengers to carry out his wishes?

The author suggests that angels are really metaphors for love, hate, malice, greed and sadism — as well as charity, generosity, vision and hope. "Angels are better understood as symbols of forces that operate within everyone of us. Some are forces for good, some for evil, some for healing and protective, some destructive."

In chassidic teaching, the very existence of angels stems from the deeds of man. "The Rabbi of Kobrin interpreted the famous dream of Jacob's ladder such that man is the ladder standing on earth, with the top rung reaching heaven. Whether angels are going up or going down depends entirely on what man does."

Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz, the eminent Talmudic scholar, offers this definition: "Angels are beings in the world that is the domain of emotion and feeling; and since this is the case, the substantial quality of an angel may be an impulse or a drive — say, an inclination in the direction of love or a seizure of fear, or pity or the like."

Thus, Rabbi Steinsaltz sees angels as aspects of human personality. They are nothing more than a reflection of human behaviour. It may be that the angel is a messenger of God but the message is one of our own making.

A Gathering of Angels has succinct notes and a helpful bibliography. There is no index, however, and the few illustrations are disappointing.

Aloha! Passover in Hawaii

HAWAII — Travel agent Richard Aiken has a simple message for those planning their Passover seders: Aloha!

Aiken, with brother Eric Aiken, has put together Passover in Paradise, an eight-day kosher vacation in Maui with special appeal for those frazzled by Passover preparations.

"For over 3,000 years, Jewish women have been slaves in their kitchens on the Festival of Freedom," he says. "This is the year of their redemption!"

The April 14-22 program is at the Stouffer Wailea Beach Resort in Maui, which has earned an AAA 5 Diamond rating for 14 years and was voted one of the World's Top 20 Tropical Resorts in Conde Nast's Traveler magazine.

"You'll wake up to a view of mountains overlooking the Pacific Ocean while your friends will be waking up to mountains of unwashed dishes," Aiken promises.

Most of the guest rooms feature spectacular views of the Pacific and the neighboring islands of Lanai, Molokai, Kahoolawe and Molokini.

Passover in Paradise will feature a choice of group or private seders with three gourmet, all-you-can-eat meals and snacks available 18 hours a day. All meals will be glatt kosher, cholov Yisroel (non-gebrocht meals available) and certified by Kosher Supervision of America (KSA) under Rabbi Binyomin Lisbon of Chabad-Beverly Hills, Calif.

You can take part in a kosher luau, in which lamb wrapped in Ti leaves will be slow-cooked for 24 hours in a special kosher pit dug on the beach.

Daily prayer services, shiurim and lectures will be available throughout the holiday. Babysitting, children's programs and separate meal seatings will be provided.

Special discount rates are available at the adjacent Wailea Golf Club and Wailea Tennis Club. The golf club features two 18-hole championship courses; the tennis club, known as "Wimbledon West," has 14 courts, three of them grass.

For reservations and information, call Passover in Paradise, 800-PESACH9 (800-737-2249) or fax 808-946-3254.

London's Jewish East End: For Canadian Jews who can trace at least one of their ancestors back to 19th-century London, taking a walking tour of the Jewish East End of London is an excellent way to discover the colorful, almost vanished world they once inhabited.

From the 1870s onwards, and especially after the Russian pogroms of the 1880s, many tens of thousands of impoverished Jews from Russia, Hungary, Romania and the Pale of Settlement settled in the working-class area near the docks of eastern London.

Nearly one-third of them were tailors and seamstresses, and many belonged to the powerful garment workers' trade union. Most were also affiliated with at least one of the hundreds of synagogues and shtieblach (storefront congregations) that sprang up all over the East End.

John Muffty's tour of the old Jewish quarter takes in Bevis Marks, the oldest synagogue in England (erected 1701), and passes Sandy's Row Synagogue and some former synagogues. As Muffty explains during the two-hour tour, much of the neighborhood was either devastated by the Nazi blitz of World War II or demolished during the period of civic reconstruction that followed.

The Wentworth Street outdoor market seems as lively as ever, although the Jewish presence of a century ago is gone. Merchants hawk new and used clothes, trinkets, watches, toys and other cheap commodities in a series of ramshackle stalls along the street.

The tour also takes in the former Petticoat Lane (now Middlesex Street), the site of another once-thriving market. Muffty points out a boarded-up washhouse dating from 1846, and the once-elegant Soup Kitchen For The Jewish Poor, which opened in 1902 to help feed the indigent Jewish masses. The tour also encompasses Bloom's, the most famous kosher restaurant in Great Britain ("but not necessarily the best").

In the early years of this century, poor and hungry Jews in London's east end would be fed in this Soup Kitchen for the Jewish Poor, which opened in 1902. [Bill Gladstone photo]

After pointing out a few more architectural relics of the former Jewish presence, Muffty acknowledges that little remains of the once-vibrant Jewish community in this neighborhood. This tour participant was disappointed to discover that much of Old Montague Street, where his great-grandparents and other relatives lived during the 1870s, retains almost none of its 19th-century rowhouses. Alas, these have been replaced by several unattractive highrise towers.

The East End was still predominantly Jewish on the October 1936 day when some 2,500 fascist blackshirts decided to show their solidarity with Hitler by marching from the Tower of London eastwards, right through the heart of the Jewish community along Whitechapel High Street. According to Muffty, there were at least as many police in attendance as well as counterdemonstrators who had vowed to stop the march at any cost.

"People were throwing things out of windows at the fascists," says Muffty, who has a postgraduate degree in history. "The slogan of the counterdemonstrators was 'They Shall Not Pass.' "

After the two sides confronted each other at the traditional gateway to the East End, the marchers made an impromptu detour to Cable Street, where more clashes occurred. Seeing the explosive potential for violence, the police ordered the fascists to reroute their march because they could not guarantee their safety in the East End.

"It was the only mass demonstration of ordinary people protesting against the fascists in all Europe," says Muffty of the episode, which is known as the Battle of Cable Street. "The thing about this is it was a genuine mass movement of ordinary people from all over."

The tour of the Jewish East End starts most Tuesdays and Sundays at 11 a.m. and costs about $10. Muffty's company, Historical Tours, also offers walks on such themes as Dickens' and Shakespeare's London, royal and aristocratic London, literary London, and wartime London with Churchill's cabinet war rooms. A room with a (great) view

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

JERUSALEM — You really feel like you're in Jerusalem when you're staying at the Sheraton Jerusalem Plaza Hotel.

Centrally located, the five-star hostelry sits off King George Street, in the heart of Israel's capital.

Rooms offer a panoramic view of both the old and the new city.

In one direction, you can see the venerable Mount of Olives cemetery, the stolid Dome of the Rock mosque, the green sweep of Mt. Scopus and beyond, the tan of the Judean Desert.

In the other, you can catch a glimpse of a gleaming white, modern metropolis — Jewish Jerusalem — squatting in a natural amphitheatre.

The hotel is within walking distance of the downtown core and such attractions as the Israel Museum, the Knesset, the Mahane Yehuda market and, of course, East Jerusalem.

Sites of interest further afield, like the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial-cum-museum, are easily accessible by bus across the street from the Sheraton.

Managed by Canadian Pacific for the first decade of its existence, the Sheraton recently marked its 20th anniversary.

And judging by its 70 per cent occupany rate, reportedly the highest in the five-star category in Jerusalem, the Sheraton maintains its reputation for excellence.

The Sheraton Jerusalem Plaza, in the heart of Israel's capital.

Unlikely combination

The majority of its guests are Americans, with a sprinkling of Israelis, Europeans and Canadians. During the winter months, a good proportion of them are observant Jews and Christian pilgrims, quite an unlikely combination.

The Sheraton has 300 rooms, including 21 suites. Regular rooms are equipped with central heating, air conditioning and color television sets with eight channels.

Penny pinchers will be glad to learn that there are specials.

If you stay five nights or more, you receive one free midweek dinner or lunch per day. And if you stay at least four nights, you're entitled to a free midweek lunch or dinner every second day.

Under the Sheraton's student program, kids stay free and receive a complimentary Shabbat meal.

The Sheraton also has a bar/bat mitzvah plan, in which the boy or girl gets free accommodation in the parents' room.

With the exception of its Cow on the Roof restaurant, which attracts serious gourmets, the hotel is glatt kosher.

The catering department is presided over by award-winning chef Shalom Kadosh. In addition to the Cow on the Roof, a French restaurant, he's responsible for the Primavera, an Italian eatery; the Terrace, a meat-and-fish barbecue place; and the Ninth Gate Lounge, a coffee and tea shop.

On Shabbat, there is a lunch buffet between 1 and 3 p.m. There is also a weekday breakfast buffet, a scrumptious experience for gourmands and gourmets alike.

Shakespearean theatre is rebuilt

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

LONDON — According to the Jewish-American literary scholar Harold Bloom, the "great canon" of Western literature begins with the Hebrew Bible and includes the works of William Shakespeare, the Elizabethan playwright whose extraordinary literary reputation shows no signs of diminishing, even after four centuries.

Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, Macbeth and other of Shakespeare's plays were first performed in the Globe Theatre, built on the south side of the Thames River in 1599. After it was destroyed by fire in 1613, the Globe was rebuilt and became the most renowned theater in Elizabethan and Jacobean London until it was demolished in 1642.

For centuries afterwards, as literary historians groped for clues about Shakespeare the man, so too did they wonder about the dimensions of the legendary Globe Theatre.

A model of the Globe Theatre, where many of Shakespeare's plays debuted. It is being rebuilt in London. [Bill Gladstone photo]

Not until October 1989, when the theatre's foundations were discovered beside another unearthed theatre called The Rose, were they able to find conclusive evidence of its true form.

A polygonal wooden structure with three covered galleries, a covered proscenium stage and an open centre, the Globe was constructed of huge oak beams, clay bricks, thatch and lime plaster.

Now, a team of master craftsmen is reconstructing the Globe using Tudor-era construction methods. The new theatre is being raised beside the original site, which is partly occupied by a historical building.

The rebuilt theatre is expected to open later this year, in time for a few Shakespearean performances mounted as they were in Elizabethan times. The theatre will be lit by natural means, with live sound effects and music. Set design will be as it was in the days when Shakespeare supervised the production of his own plays here.

As the theatre goes up, visitors may view an exhibit on Shakespeare's Globe, then take a short guided tour of the theatre as construction progresses. The cost is about $9 for adults, $7 for students and seniors, $5.50 for children.

Situated near the Mansion House underground station, the Globe is along the New Globe Walk, Bankside. Call 071-928-6406.

Day school students get top marks in testing

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

With few exceptions, Grade 9 students attending Jewish day high schools attained outstanding results relative to the rest of Ontario in across the province tests in reading and writing.

All Ontario Grade 9 students wrote provincially-developed reading and writing tests earlier this year. The students who are presently attending Grade 9 will be tested this year as part of a two-year study by the Ministry of Education and Training.

The aim of these tests is to help students improve their reading and writing skills by providing information on their individual performance judged against provincial standards and to provide information useful in assessing and improving the effectiveness of existing reading and writing programs in grades 1 to 9.

To prepare the teachers to administer the tests consistently and fairly, workshops were held across the province. A six point scale was used to evaluate the performance results — superior, proficient, competent, adequate, limited and dependent.

The students were obliged to work on a number of reading and writing assignments which were assessed by specially trained markers at the Ministry of Education. Performance levels were also assessed by category for gender, participation in ESL programs, language spoken at home, number of years in Canada and other factors.

The results show that generally, students who performed well in reading also performed well in writing. Students who reported doing more reading out of school did better both in reading and in writing. As well, students who reported doing more writing in school did better both in reading and writing. Female students performed considerably better than male students in both reading and writing.

Sherri Wise, a teacher at Beth Jacob High School for Girls, whose students did well compared to the province, believes that the private day schools probably did better because of socio-economic conditions and because of the interest of the parents. "The students were continuing the kinds of activities that take place in the classroom."

Wise noted that the Grade 9 tests help educators in making informed curriculum decisions and the tests have educational validity.

Students at the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT) recorded high scores on the six point scale in both reading and writing when tested against the students in the province.

"The English Department at CHAT worked very hard to prepare the students for the test," says Rabbi Marvin Pachino, the headmaster. "Also, we realize that our feeder schools are, to a large measure, responsible as well, for the excellent results that our students achieved."

David Rawcliffe of Ner Israel Yeshiva College cautions against school by school comparisons for the results do not take into account the makeup of the school's student body. He said that there are some public schools which have programs or are located in areas where there is a highly educated population. As well, some private schools screen out weaker students.

"Therefore, to say a school performs better than another could be inaccurate if it is then assumed that the students work harder or the teachers teach better." Rawcliffe adds that it is good to have an independent view of your students' abilities. "As most information came out towards the end of the school year, it should be used in Grade 10 as a means of trying to help students improve their reading and writing skills."

Yeshivat Bnei Akiva Or Chaim - Ulpanat Orot Girls' School scored very high on the scale in both reading and writing. In line with the provincial statistics, the female students at Ulpanat achieved higher scores than the male students at Or Chaim. The female students at CHAT also surpassed the male students.

Dr. Norman Smith of Bnei Akiva-Ulpanat Orot told The CJN that in fairness to the province, there is a statistically significant difference "because their mission is to teach every youngster — our mission is that we deal with a more select student body. We do appropriate and challenging things with them to make maximum use of their abilities."

The ministry suggests that schools should determine the degree to which any difference between their results and the provincial results are educationally meaningful.

16,000 students getting Jewish education

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

Although the number of students enrolled in Jewish education classes is up, the percentage of the total population in such classes is down.

So said Rabbi Irwin Witty, executive director of the Toronto Board of Jewish Education, who reviewed the year's figures with The CJN.

Just over 16,000 students enrolled in Jewish education classes, 9,793 in elementary and secondary day schools, and 6,219 in supplementary schools. That is up 336 over last year.

But the good news about an increase is offset by a decline in the rate of preschool enrolment, Rabbi Witty said.

The 1994 figures show 8,391 students in Jewish elementary schools and 1,402 in Jewish high schools. Included in supplementary school figures are 632 pupils enrolled in five enterprenurial schools not affiliated with the Board of Jewish Education, and 579 children are enrolled in heritage language programs run by boards of education in Toronto, North York and York region. The program provides 70 hours of Hebrew instruction each year.

The closing of a school catering to children of Israelis was disappointing, Rabbi Witty said, because it was hoped it would attract Israelis to the Jewish school system. "Unfortunately, the Israeli community is not invovled at this time."

A second-year seven per cent cut in parent subsidy grants from the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto impacted school budgets. The Federation grants amounted to $6,515,000.

The failure of Jewish school enrolment to keep up with the growth of the Greater Toronto Jewish community is more than a lack of dollars, in Rabbi Witty's opinion. It is a lifestlye choice, one in which Jewish parents choose to buy an extra car or a larger boat. "Unfortunately, Jewish education is an accessible victim to these costs," he said.

The decline in the percentage of children attending Jewish classes has been going on for the past 25 years, the executive director said. A committee of elementary and high school principals has been formed to find ways to boost enrolment.

The opening of the Bais Brucha school in Shaarei Tefillah Synagogue, with 51 junior and senior kindergarten pupils, and the inauguration of the new Netivot Hatorah Day School, Leo Baeck Day School and Associated Hebrew Day School campus on Thornhill's Atkinson Avenue were signal events of the year.

Construction is expected to start on a new high school, Yeshiva Gedola, in the Bathurst-Lawrence area.

Looking back at Jewish education in Toronto, Rabbi Witty said the establishment of Israel, the presence of Holocaust survivors in the community, the awareness of Federation leaders of the importance of education, and the strength of the traditional elements have all combined to strengthen the system.

Teens beginning to make adult decisions

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

This year marks The CJN's fourth annual look at life through the eyes of four young people.

Alison Bresver, Naomi Emerson, Jacob Korenblum, all 15, and Chaim Greenwald, 16, are the focus of a series to be completed in the year 2000. They were recommended by their Jewish schools at the time of their bat and bar mitzvahs, as intelligent, articulate and fairly typical representatives of their backgrounds.

Ali, the only public school student at the time, has continued her Jewish education at Temple Emanu-El, where she now attends confirmation classes.

Naomi, an alumna of Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto, a co-educational traditional day school, is now in Grade 10 at Ulpanat Orot, an all-girl Bnei Akiva School.

Jacob is a Grade 10 student in the gifted program at Northern Secondary School, which he entered after graduating from Bialik Hebrew Day School, and Chaim is boarding for the second year at Wisconsson Institute of Torah Study (WITS) in Milwaukee.

• • •

The youngsters see themselves as being somewhere along the spectrum between childhood and adulthood. As Jacob put it, "You have to make some adult decisions, but you can also have fun. I think it's the best age."

All four students were moved by Schindler's List, Stephen Spielberg's award-winning movie about the Holocaust. Ali found herself in tears at the end of the film. "I'm not usually that emotional at movies."

Jacob Korenblum

What impressed Jacob was the number of non-Jews in the audience when he saw the movie. "That's an important thing. It's accessible to so many people. I think it was more successful than any other kind of educational program for non-Jews."

Alison Bresver is a young woman who stands by her convictions. In last year's article, she was quoted as saying she didn't see anything wrong with interdating and implied that intermarriage was a viable possibility for her.

Her comments generated much feedback, not all of it positive, she reports. "A lot of people didn't agree with me, but this is how I feel."

Alison Bresver, with Cody

She still sees nothing wrong with interdating, she says. "I don't have a preference one way or the other. If he's a nice guy, then great." Because most of Ali's friends are Christian, she says that interdating would be a "logical" act, not a rebellious one. For now it's a moot point. Although some of her Grade 10 friends at Lawrence Park Collegiate have started to date, she has not.

Some of her peers have begun to experiment with drugs, but she says there is no pressure on her to join them. "I'm not going to follow them into it, but I wouldn't not be their friend because of it," she says.

Ali is very "into" sports right now and says her ambition is to be a sports announcer for NFL Prime Time.

She is struck by the differences between her and the other students profiled, particularly the two Orthodox students. "We're all so different, but we're the same religion."

Being Jewish, for Ali, means "to be spiritually involved; to do what you think is right." Sometimes she finds that "just thinking" during services gives her "more of a feeling of being Jewish than reciting prayers I learned a few years ago."

Ali is very excited about an upcoming trip to Israel this summer with her confirmation class. She admits that she is not knowledgeable about the political situation there. "I'm looking forward to the spiritual part of the trip. Everyone who's been says it makes you feel a lot stronger about being Jewish. To actually be there would be really cool."

• • •

Naomi Emerson

Naomi shares Ali's excitement about Israel, and has been there four times, most recently last summer, when she visited for seven weeks after traveling alone to see relatives in England.

A Grade 10 student at Ulpanat Orot, Naomi is very comfortable with her Orthodoxy. "I was brought up this way. It comes naturally not to buy something that doesn't have a kosher symbol, not to turn the light on [on Shabbat]. Being Jewish is a whole way of living for me. It's standing out from everyone else, trying not to conform to the whole society. There are a lot of differences."

Naomi admits to having questions. "You don't always just do something because you're being told to do it. You want to know why. We've asked teachers questions, and I ask my parents a lot."

Naomi wouldn't consider interdating or intermarriage. "It's wrong," she says. "If there's so much intermarriage, Jews will just become totally assimilated."

Naomi would hesitate to marry a non-Orthodox man, let alone a non-Jewish one. "I don't think it would be possible for me to have a solid marriage with someone Conservative unless one of us [was willing to] bend."

Although Naomi attends an all-girl school, she counts boys among her friends and goes out in large mixed groups. "The guys, I guess, make it more fun," she says of school, "but [in an all-girl class] girls aren't afraid to excel if they want to. I think some girls don't want to look too smart in front of boys."

She thinks about working with special needs children some day, and is volunteering twice weekly at Zareinu (a school for children with multiple handicaps).

"As an Orthodox Jew, I feel chesed (acts of loving kindness) is as important as keeping kosher," says Naomi of her volunteer work.

• • •

Chaim, like Naomi, is Orthodox. His life revolves around the yeshivah, where classes run until 9 p.m. Friday afternoons are free, but Sunday mornings are devoted to more classes.

To the best of Chaim's knowledge, nobody at WITS takes illegal drugs. "Sometimes people take coffee [to keep them alert through long hours of study]. People sometimes drink [alcohol] very occasionally. If you're caught, you get expelled."

Chaim Greenwald

Chaim says he feels privileged to be Jewish. "I think we're the chosen people."

That doesn't mean that he looks down on non-Jews, he stresses. "I respect non-Jews. All the General Studies teachers here are non-Jews. They have a good rapport with the kids."

An avid football fan, Chaim keeps up with the latest sports news by listening to the radio. He also plays on the school's new intermural football league.

Liberal Kolel 'a model'

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

When Rabbi Elyse Goldstein, former assistant rabbi at Holy Blossom Temple, and later a congregational rabbi in Boston, took on the directorship of the Kolel in January 1991, there were no students, courses or teachers. "They [the community leaders] told me, 'Here's funding. Here's an office. Make it happen.' "

By September of that year, the Kolel, a centre for liberal Jewish learning, had 40 students. Today there are 250 people enrolled each semester and 1,700 people on the mailing list. "We have just burst at the seams in 3½ years," Rabbi Goldstein said.

The Kolel is now considered so successful that it has become a model for other liberal Jewish institutions, she said.

Each semester the Kolel offers 12 12-week courses which are given at a variety of locations throughout the Greater Toronto Area. The cost of a course is $100 for adults and $30 for students. The faculty consists of rabbis and Jewish educators.

A broad range of courses is offered, from advanced Torah study in biblical Hebrew, to basic Judaism covering the holidays and the life cycles. Other courses include Talmudic study, biblical Hebrew, Rabbinic history, a survey of Jewish theology and women in the Tanach.

The basic Judaism class — which she calls "Sunday school for adults" — attracts many people who have been disconnected from Judaism, she said. "They want a way back in, but not through a synagogue agenda."

Rabbi Goldstein finds that many of the people who attend the more advanced courses are also seeking spiritual renewal. "People are looking to reconnect," she said. "They are looking for an intellectual sophisticated connection."

The social and historical analysis of the religious texts offered by Kolel appeals to many students, she said. "People are grateful for another opportunity to study, especially in a high-level yet progressive atmosphere that is clearly egalitarian.

Rabbi Elyse Goldstein (standing, centre) leads a class at the Kolel, an institute for liberal Jewish learning.

"We're not so afraid to do critical scholarship [of the sacred texts] using historical methodology. And when we teach our course on women and Judaism it's taught from a feminist viewpoint with a very clear lack of apologetics."

Rabbi Goldstein recently initiated the Chavruta Program for private Torah study. She will match partners for weekly joint Torah study sessions and hold monthly seminars for all the participants. "It's a program to get people excited about studying on their own," she said. There is no charge for this program.

Coming back to Toronto to run the Kolel was a gamble that paid off for Rabbi Goldstein, but the success of the centre is not something that can be quantified, she said.

"The truth is, success is not measured by the number of students or the amount of funds that are raised, but by how we touch people's lives, how we infuse their lives with Jewish meaning. I feel that's our [the Kolel's] mandate. It's a privilege and a blessing to be the director of a program that does that."

Shlichim join B'nei Akiva

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

B'nei Akiva Schools, Or Chaim Yeshiva and Ulpanat Orot Girls School, has followed its religious Zionist philosophy with the appointment of two shlichim to senior staff positions.

Rabbi Shlomo Gemara is the new rosh yeshivah, replacing Rabbi Avishai David, and Rabbi Shlomo Brown is menahel (Jewish studies principal) of Ulpanat Orot, replacing Rabbi Moshe Rachimi.

Rabbis David and Rachimi have assumed positions in Israeli educational institutions.

The two schools, with a total enrollment of nearly 200 students, have five families on shlichut from Israel, with eight serving as teachers at the school.

They bring a unique atmosphere to the school, the two rabbis agree, describing how the families invite the youngsters to visit, for parties and to spend Shabbat with them.

The connection with Israel becomes something very real, Rabbi Brown says. "They hear our stories — and our stories are the story of Israel."

Rabbis Gemara and Brown studied at hesder yeshivahs (yeshivahs which combine Torah study with army service), and taught at religious zionist schools in Israel, Rabbi Gemara at Nechalim in Petah Tikvah, and Rabbi Brown at Midreshet Lindenbaum (known as Brovender's) in Jerusalem.

Both of their wives are teachers. Ofra Gemara teaches at Ulpana; Brazilian-born Rifka Brown teaches at Eitz Chaim and She'arim.

Rabbi Gemara told The CJN that he is committed to the fundamental values of B'nei Akiva Schools, which he defined as Torah, the land and the state of Israel, and Jewish identity.

As well, "I want to prepare boys and girls for the beauty of Jewish family life," he says.

To direct students to the highest spiritual level, he says, requires the separation of male and female students (boys attend Or Chaim, girls Ulpanat Orot).

"Generally, I want to develop a program using the new, modern education philosophy (which truly is our old traditional system!)" which transfers the onus of learning to the individual.

'Increase ahavat Torah'

He says that he wants to enable stronger students to have enriched programs, taught at their level, as well as for weaker students to be supported and encouraged.

"My goal is to increase ahavat Torah (love of Torah learning)," he says.

The school teaches Hebrew and religious subjects in Hebrew. Rabbi Gemara is aware that this can be a problem, as "we have to face the fact that the Hebrew level [of entering students] is not as high as I expected."

He has established an "ulpan" class, specially designed to have students able to enter regular Hebrew classes by the end of the first year.

"Baruch HaShem, we see that OAC graduates go to Israeli yeshivahs and michlalot (yeshivahs for women) with no problems.

"I want parents to know that we accept students with no Hebrew skills at all. We will give them the tools to bridge the gap."

Rabbi Brown says that while he recognizes the importance of both Torah and secular learning, he wants the students to understand that "it is more important to be a mentsh than to get 100."

He aims to teach this on a "one to one basis, every day," teaching by example and explanation.

Because Ulpana has only women students, the rabbi says he can teach according to their needs, being sensitive to their differences as women.

"This is not making a value judgement, or saying that boys or girls are better. The girls gain a lot, because we focus on their needs."

He is a firm advocate of the school's policy of encouraging students to spend a year in Israel after graduation.

For those who want to make aliyah, he says, that year is a good preparation. "They will know what to expect from the country."

Even for those who don't want to live in Israel, the experience is a good one, he says.

For one thing, it gives the sudents a year dedicated to pure Torah study, when "they take responsibility for themselves, do what they want to do, and generally have a break before making other major decisions.

"You send a kid to Israel: you get an adult back," he believes.

You can measure how many chapters (of Torah) children learn, Rabbi Brown says — you can't measure ahavat Yisroel (love of Israel).

Leo Baeck gets new campus

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

The first day of school this year ushered in a new era for the students and staff of the Leo Baeck Hebrew Day School north campus.

They moved into their own building in Thornhill, vacating a rented North York school that Leo Baeck had used for 10 years.

Four hundred and forty students from nursery school age to Grade 8 take classes at the fully accessible three-storey building on Atkinson Avenue. Facilities include a chapel for weekly Kabbalat Shabbat services, a gymnasium/auditorium, a library, an arts and crafts centre, and computer and science rooms.

When architect Mark Nightingale of Makrimichalos Cugini Architects designed the 55,000-sq.-ft. school, he created a building filled with natural light.

Classrooms ring the building to capture an abundance of natural light through a wall of windows. The gymnasium/auditorium and the library are in the building's centre, but get indirect light through a skylight. "Even on a gray day," Nightingale said, "you don't feel you're in artificial light."

Leo Baeck, Canada's only Reform Jewish day school, is affiliated with the Holy Blossom Temple, Temple Emanu-El, Temple Har Zion, Temple Sinai and Temple Kol Ami.

The Holy Blossom campus currently offers senior kindergarten to Grade 3, with Grade 4 to be added in 1995.

The Atkinson campus has half-day nursery school and junior kindergarten programs. Senior kindergarten is a full-day made up of Hebrew, French, music, art, physical education and library.

The curriculum for grades 1 to 5 is divided into three segments: Hebrew/Judaic studies in keeping with the teachings of Reform congregations, English and math and science. Music, art, French, computer studies and physical education are integrated throughout the program. "There's a lot of creative activity in the school," said school director Zita Gardner.

The senior grades have their own area and their own program. Students follow a 45-minute timetable, with double periods for Hebrew and English. Each student has a homeroom advisor.

Grade 8 students regularly volunteer at Baycrest and other classes lead Kabbalat Shabbat services there. Last year students made a video they sent to a Reform day school in Israel, and this year they have pen pals at two Israeli schools.

Extracurricular activities at the Atkinson campus include folkdancing, a choir and girls' and boys' basketball teams.

Gardner stressed that the teacher is the key to a good learning experience. "Our teachers are all experienced, qualified and put a tremendous amount into their teaching," she said.

The new building also houses Temple Kol Ami, the Canadian Council for Reform Judaism, Kolel: A Centre for Liberal Jewish Learning, and a community mikvah.

Dating not a pressing issue

Dating remains something Chaim has yet to "check into. We date to get married."

Assimilation is "not a big issue" within the yeshivah, according to Chaim. But WITS isn't totally isolated from the rest of the Milwaukee Jewish community, he notes. "The yeshivah has an outreach program and classes for non-Orthodox people in the community. We consider the yeshivah part of the whole community."

• • •

Jacob is the only one of the four who has experienced both the day school and the public school system.

"I'm definitely glad I had the day school education," he says, "but I'm also glad I'm in public school now. You get a different experience. I like being exposed to people from different backgrounds, and I can take subjects I would never have been able to take if I'd gone to CHAT [Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto]."

He has kept up his Jewish education by continuing to attend a weekly class for high school students at the Bloor JCC.

This year he began teaching Hebrew to a young student, which keeps it fresh in his mind and gives him a feeling of connection to Judaism.

Jacob is an active alumnus of the Toronto Children's Chorus, and went Christmas carolling door-to-door with his musical peers this year. He called it "a pretty neat experience."

As a choir alumnus, he has already dealt with what he terms the "dilemma" of being Jewish and singing Christian religious songs. "You have to appreciate it for the musical values," he says.

About half of Jacob's friends are Jewish, he says. Every so often, he and a Catholic friend "do the religious argument, but it's not confrontational. It's, 'You do this. This is what we do. Can you tell me more?' Being Jewish obviously sets me apart, but not in a negative way."

As far as he knows, none of his friends are into drugs, but he does know people who drink. "I know technically it's illegal, but I don't really see what's wrong with it if it's once in a while."

Interdating is "not a pressing issue" for him right now, Jacob says. He has both male and female friends. "I don't think interdating is that big of a deal, but intermarriage certainly is, because if you're dating someone who's not Jewish, you're not going to spend the rest of your life with them, but intermarriage will definitely have an impact on your life."

Making the healthy choice

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Food is the favorite topic of every mother — my child eats too much, my child doesn't eat at all, my child only eats junk food, my child is a vegetarian. How do we get kids, especially teenagers, to practise moderation in their eating habits?

"Give them choices. Allow them to choose, from a variety of wholesome foods, what they would like to see in their lunches. Chances are, if they pick it themselves, they'll eat it. Also, get the whole family involved in a healthy lifestyle. Kids learn by example," says Fran Berkoff, a nutritionist at Mount Sinai Hospital.

Michal Capland, a physical education teacher at Beth Jacob, a Hebrew high school with an enrolment of about 300 girls, says she teaches her students the consequences of an unbalanced diet.

"I explain that too little food can affect their concentration and their energy level," she says. "I emphasize the importance of breakfast and encourage them to eat something small rather than not eat breakfast at all. These girls have a long day at school; so I also try to encourage them to eat a good lunch.

"I'm happy to see that in general, the girls are starting to make healthy choices. They are drinking more juice instead of pop and choosing a healthy snack instead of something with empty calories.

"For the past several years, I have had a nurse come in to teach the students about nutrition, as well as give them a chance to ask about anything the concerns them. Sometimes it is easier to approach a stranger about personal matters and it is important for the girls to be able to ask and get answers. They are at an age now when it is important to learn about a moderate lifestyle — excercise, good diet and enough rest."

Lil Fox, girls' athletic director at the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT) also has a professional come to talk to the girls about nutrition and eating disorders. "I like to have people in the field come in for a chat — people who can tell it just like it is. Sometimes the girls get tired of listening to us."

She says that teaching high school students about nutrition is a daunting task, because "they are at an age when they do not believe these things apply to them. It is at their age, however, when good nutrition is essential. Their bodies are still developing. If they carry on good nutritional habits until they are at least 21, chances are the habits will carry on into adulthood."

Fox concedes that parents have no control over what their kids eat for lunch, "but the best we can do is give them healthy choices. Find out what a kid likes and stick to it. Even if they eat the same lunch every day, at least they're eating something with some nutritional value."

Berkoff advises parents not to make an issue out of a child's weight. "They must be made to feel comfortable about their body," she says. "And even if other family members are concerned about their own weight, these attitudes filter down to the children. Families need to re-explore the whole issue of dieting and healthy lifestyles."

Oakville preschool combines Jewish and secular content

By RUTH SCHWEITZER

Oakville's Jewish community has grown rapidly in the past decade as young Jewish families move to the area, but until recently none of the many preschools in the area reflected Jewish beliefs.

After watching the Reform Shaarei Beth El Synagogue almost triple its membership over a nine-year period, from 50 families to 140, Oakville resident Judi Setton began thinking of opening a Jewish preschool.

"I'm a bit of a dreamer," she said.

Setton and other parents realized that dream last September with the opening of the Gan Alon (garden of oaks) school. The preschool operates Tuesday and Thursday afternoons and is for children aged 2 to 5½.

Setton's 2-year-old son David is one of nine children attending Gan Alon. "He's really enjoying it," she said. Jewish content makes up about half of the programming and reflects Reform teachings. Monthly programs have included activities centred around Rosh Hashanah, Shabbat and Chanukah, and every other Thursday Rabbi Edward Goldfarb of Shaarei Beth El hosts the tots in the synagogue's sanctuary.

Gan Alon students pose for a class picture.

Rabbi Goldfarb oversees the curriculum with Setton, an accredited music teacher who is Gan Alon's music instructor. Twice a month the children learn songs in English and in Hebrew.

Gan Alon is run in cooperation with Little Scholar Preschool, a non-denominational preschool that has used Shaarei Beth El's facilities for the past seven years.

Marlene Rizzuto, the early childhood educator who operates Little Scholar, was enthusiastic about starting a Jewish preschool. She enlisted her 19-year-old daughter Raquel to research Jewish customs and holidays in order to build a program.

Most of Gan Alon's activities are carried on in one large room with areas for arts and crafts, blocks, interlocking toys, a computer and a drama centre, where kids dress-up and play with toy replicas of a house, a beauty salon, a bakery and a firestation.

The preschool incorporates both Jewish and non-Jewish themes. "It's learning, but learning through fun," Rizzuto said.

Each session lasts 2½ hours. The $103 monthly program cost includes kosher snacks and holiday foods.

For information, call the Little Scholar Preschool at 905-849-3878.

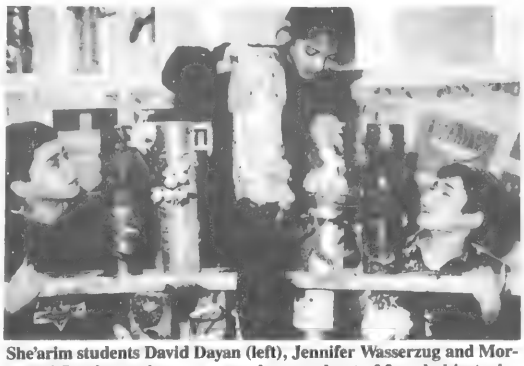
Arts program aids kids' skills

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter



She'arim students David Dayan (left), Jennifer Wasserzug and Mordechai Soroka work on a menorah created out of found objects, including plaster casts, and telephone wire.

Recycled paper rolls, bits of telephone wire, scraps of fabric and leftover simchah decorations are helping students of She'arim Hebrew Day School improve their cognitive, motor, organizational and social skills.

And the kids are having a ball taking part in Judy Spetter's Integrated Arts program.

She'arim is a school for children with learning disabilities; that is, those with difficulty taking in, processing or disseminating information.

Learning disabilities are in no way linked with intelligence. The children, who are often quite bright, tend to be aware that they have these problems, and get very frustrated.

Poor motor skills, as well as difficulty in dealing with other people, often accompany learning disabilities, compounding the youngsters' emotional upheaval and lack of confidence.

That's where the Integrated Arts program comes in.

Spetter began her program three years ago, with the assistance of the Endowment Fund of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto. It is now funded by She'arim.

Part of her mandate, she told The CJN, is to work with as much recyclable material as possible. "There is a metamorphosis. The kids take something familiar, like a ladle, or a chair, and change its structure and function to something completely new."

The children learn planning skills, she explained. "They have to think through what they are doing. They have to problem solve, analyse, divide tasks, prioritize."

The process teaches them logical, independent and sequential thinking, as well as helping to reduce impulsive behavior, another frequent companion to learning disabilities.

Spetter said she may take a whole morning just to plan. The students confer with each other, listen, make choices. "The end product is something they all created."

Among the projects that the children have created are a golem (a realistic, plaster human figure), tissue paper and clothes hanger angels, a mural on Jewish history and menorahs.

Artist Judy Dan has donated looms and weaving materials to the school, and the students are learning to weave.

Spetter is enthusiastic about her newest project, origami, the Japanese art of paper folding.

"This is the richest art form for fostering cognitive functions and manipulations skills," she enthuses, explaining how youngsters have to learn precision, accuracy when transferring information from a pictorial model or from written instructions, and the skill of restructuring a simple unit, a flat piece of paper, into a more complex, three dimensional structure.

Teachers can (and often do) come to her with particular problems a student or a class seems to be having, and she will design a project to overcome it. This may involve getting a painfully shy child to present a project to other students, or a class where students don't get along with each other working on a group project, where each member has an equal responsibility for the finished product.

She'arim principal Dori Levine is more than pleased with the success of the Integrated Arts program.

"It fits beautifully into our school. It is astonishing how well Judy uses cognitive strategies to bring out the best of the kids' creativity."

Israel study year can boost graduates' Jewish identity

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

The coming weeks will be tense for Toronto student Chava Berman and those like her waiting to learn what the future holds for their education.

Berman, 17, is in her final year at the religious Zionist Ulpanat Orot high school. She hopes to spend next year studying towards her teacher's certificate in Israel, and to that end has applied to two women's yeshivot in the Jerusalem area. She won't know if she has been accepted until March.

"It's the worst month in our lives," she wails over the telephone from the school office in Downsview.

A study year in Israel has long been promoted by Jewish educators as a way for Canadian students to better identify with Judaism, whether pursuing religious studies in yeshivot or secular studies at one of Israel's eight universities.

"Being in Israel for a year is a very moving, very growing experience," says Rabbi Chaim Sacknovitcz of the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT).

As director of guidance at CHAT, it is Rabbi Sacknovitcz's job to inform the high school's 106 graduating students about study options in Israel, which can cost between $6,000 and $15,000 for a year's program. Scholarships are widely available.

This year only six CHAT graduates have committed themselves to a year abroad, which means postponing their studies here. "Most kids are in such a hurry to go to university," Rabbi Sacknovitcz says, "that they think a year in Israel is a waste of time."

Not Laz Klein, now a third-year medical student at the University of Toronto. Klein, 24, credits his 1990-1991 year at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem's Rothberg School for Overseas Students with helping him choose medicine as a career path.

"Having a year away from science, where not everyone was doing chemistry experiments, made me realize I wanted to apply to medical school," he says about the political science and sociology lectures he took in at Hebrew U. "Now I would never want to do anything else."

A junior year at the Hebrew U is one of the more popular Israel study options for Canadian students, with 100 taking credit courses through the Rothberg School last year.

Popular study option

The 10-month program, which runs over $13,000 without airfare, includes a six-week ulpan and dormitory room and board. The Canadian Friends of Hebrew University reports an additional 20 Canadian students enrolled last year for the mechinah (preparatory) program in order to complete their degree at Hebrew U.

Another popular study option is yeshivot. Hesder yeshivot combine religious studies in Hebrew with military service, while "American" yeshivot conduct their classes for young men in English.

Of the latter, Beit Midrash l'Torah (BMT, now Tochnit Torat Yerushalayim) has attracted a number of Canadian high school graduates like Rafi Cashman of Toronto.

Cashman, 19, spent last year at BMT in Jerusalem after completing his studies at CHAT. Now studying general arts at the U of T, Cashman says his Israel year "made me realize much more the value of learning."

An articulate young man committed to furthering his religious education, Cashman says his greatest difficulty was not in adjusting to Israel, but rather in returning to Toronto and reconnecting with the friends he left behind. Klein had the same experience, but says it was offset by the new friends he made in Israel.

Not every student will be comforted by the thought of future friendships. That is why some choose to study in Israel with their current friends.

Jerry Solomon, executive director of Yeshivat Or Chaim, the brother school of Ulpanat Orot in Toronto, says he expects that every one of this year's 20 graduating students is going on to study in Israel, mostly in pairs. "Networking helps the adjustment" to institutions like Yeshivot Ma'aleh, Or Etzion and the overseas program at Yeshivat Hakotel, Solomon says.

For Chava Berman that may be difficult. "I didn't apply to traditional schools for Ulpanat, places like Brovender's, Michlelet Orot and Michlala (Jerusalem College for Women)," she says, breathless from an interview with her number 1 choice.

Only one other classmate applied to the same $13,000 program, which accepts between 70 and 80 students a year. Berman knows it will be a matter of weeks before she finds out if she is one of them, but says it doesn't make the wait any easier. "Our entire future depends on this."

Choosing the right preschool

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

If you want your preschooler to be educated in a Jewish setting, there are a variety of kindergarten programs to choose from in the Greater Toronto Area.

Most Jewish day schools have junior kindergarten (JK) for 4- to 5-year-olds and senior kindergarten (SK) for 5- to 6-year-olds. There are also some day cares and community preschools which have kindergarten programs.

Choosing a preschool program for children means balancing both the parents' and the children's needs, because many working parents have to send their children to full-day programs, Sadie Domb, the administrator of B'nai Shalom North, a Thornhill day care, told The CJN.

"It's important that young children gain that feeling of being proud of their Judaism," Domb said. "The younger they are exposed to a Jewish education the better, because they're like sponges. That's what they'll carry with them all their lives."

She suggested that parents looking for a preschool should visit perspective centres with the child, to observe his or her reaction to the setting. Parents should ask questions about the curriculum and structure, and make sure the program is licensed and run by qualified staff, she said.

Loving Care, another Jewish day care currently located at Eitz Chaim School in Thornhill, added an SK program three years ago. Devorah Weinberg, the day care director, said children who complete this SK program adapt easily to Grade 1 in a day school.

According to Weinberg, an all-day SK is advantageous because there's time to teach reading readiness. "We don't have to get it all in quickly," she said. "We have a whole day."

The purpose of kindergarten is to prepare the students for grade school, build their self-esteem and give them a love of learning, she said. The main difference between JK and SK is the amount of time students spend acquiring such skills as basic math concepts and reading readiness.

Eileen Goldstein, the preschool program coordinator at Netivot HaTorah Day School, an orthodox Jewish day school in Thornhill, also sees kindergarten as a preparatory program. "It's the bridge that goes from pure experiential learning to a more formal setting," she told The CJN.

Goldstein outlined several areas of skill development, which included listening, socialization, math readiness and fine motor coordination. Such skills are integrated through music, art, cooking and language arts, she said.

Goldstein stressed that enjoyment is crucial to the kindergarten experience. "We want the kids to have a good time," she said. "Playing is a learning experience. It's an important element."

Temple Sinai operates preschool programs for children age 2½ to 6. These are co-op programs, where parents participate at every level.

Parents investigating preschool programs should look for one that will develop their child's self-esteem and enjoyment for learning, said Yonah Ander, director of the Temple Sinai program. "It should be warm and loving."

She advises parents to choose a program with a low teacher-student ratio, to check the teachers' qualifications and to make sure the environment is safe and well-maintained.

Children from Torah Tots learn about fire safety from "Captain Blizzard."

National Bridal Show February 3–5 at Exhibition Place

The National Bridal Show is celebrating its 14th successful year as southern Ontario's foremost bridal show. It will be held on the weekend of Friday, February 3 to Sunday, February 5, in the Queen Elizabeth Building at Exhibition Place.

Here, brides and grooms-to-be can see the latest wedding products and trends, one-stop shop for every need, get a head start on their own plans, and co-ordinate their decisions. Couples will find virtually every wedding product and service for every budget and taste.

There are over 250 exhibitors, representing bridal salons, florists, disc jockeys, orchestras, gift shops, invitations, jewelers, reception facilities, travel agencies, video services, confectioners and wineries. There are experts to advise on every aspect of the wedding from the ring to the honeymoon. As many of our exhibitors are party planners, anyone planning other special events such as a bar or bat mitzvah will also benefit from attending.

Among the highlights are two separate fashion shows, sponsored by Today's Bride Magazine and Braun. Presented on all three days, the fashion shows feature Toronto's top designers, and the newest Canadian and European collections for Spring/Summer '95. This year's theme is "True Love"; this is also the new perfume from Elizabeth Arden, who will decorate our fashion stage in a "True Love" theme.

In the Couture Fashion Shows, custom bridal designers bring their latest creations to the Toronto Bridal Show runway, Participants are: Anita Wilson (AWE), Maria Couturier Bridals, Marquessa, Morbella, Nadene Cain, Roksolana, Studio A, Tomé Dress Salon and Valencienne.

The Boutique Fashion Shows highlight Toronto's leading bridal boutiques, presenting their lineup of styles for the entire wedding party. Boutique Show participants are: Bay Bridal Salon "Ethos", Allie Fashion and Bridal Wear, Big Beautiful Brides, Bridal Warehouse, Lina's Boutique, Ritché and Sposabella, and Victoriana.

Tuxedo companies participating are: Andrew's Formal Rentals, Classy Formal Wear, Freeman Formalwear, Syd Silver, Tuxedo Royale and Tuxedo Town.

Just before each fashion show, there are draws for door prizes. Brides-to-be can win one of five Braun Kitchens, or one of Elizabeth Arden's fabulous Gift Baskets (value $250.00) with products from their new "True Love" fragrance.

Our Seminar Program offers couples an entertaining, informative look at planning a wedding to reflect their personal style. Here is the lineup for 1995:

Clinique's "Bridal Beauty Countdown" seminar starts with a skin care checkup, them matches your makeup with colors to complement your fabric, flowers and individual tastes. Clinique's team of experts will help you learn all you need to know about skin care, makeup and fragrance, to ensure that you are at your best on that special day.

In "Color the Man of Your Life", Patricia DeSimone of Tuxedo Royale presents a seminar on color co-ordinating the men in your wedding party to complement any theme. Accessories are the key to a look of distinction; why not let Tuxedo Royale help you color the entire wedding party?

In "Creating Unique Bridal Flowers" with Lynn Tarquin of Fenton's Flowers, learn how to choose your wedding flowers, including the latest designs for bridal bouquets, attendants' bouquets and head table arrangements. Lynn, who has been creating one-of-a-kind bouquets for brides, will present live models showing exquisite bouquets of preserved flowers.

In "The Winning Way of Gift Registry", Suzanne Savage, Gift Registry Co-ordinator for The Bay, presents a new perspective on choosing wedding and shower gifts.

Piano Players Plus and Divertimento Music present "Music, Maestro Please", with interesting combinations of musicians to add sparkle to your wedding day from ceremony to reception, and tips on choosing your music and musicians.

In "Doing it Right for the Men in Your Wedding", Leonard Goldstein of Freeman Formalwear presents an informative look at dressing the men in your wedding party, with tips on co-ordinating color, style and fit.

In "Dazzling Centrepieces", Stewart Hurry of Tidy's Flowers will create two centrepieces that demonstrate the Tidy's touch.

Bridal Show hours are: Friday 5:00 to 10:00 p.m.; Saturday 10:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m.; and Sunday 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Admission is $8.00. For Saturday night after 6:00 p.m., there is a special admission of $5.00. For more information, please call Kathy O'Hara or Marti Milks at (416) 661-2056; fax (416) 661-2094.

Redstone Pictures Productions: Now on the Cutting Edge of Non-Linear Editing Technology

Richard Saunders of Redstone Pictures Productions announces the acquisition of AVID Technology Non-Linear Editing Suite. The acquisition puts Redstone on a par with some of the major production studios across North America.

Redstone Pictures now offers its clientele non-linear technology from Avid. Avid editing guarantees the highest quality video picture and sound reproduction obtainable. The exceptional quality is due to the fact that non-linear editing is accomplished without the use of video tape.

Perfect Reproduction

Sound and picture are completely digital guaranteeing perfect reproduction without generation loss. "What we are talking about is the difference in quality between a cassette tape and a compact disc," says owner Richard Saunders.

"Imagine the difference between using a type writer and a word processor. Non-Linear gives us total control in the editing process. We now have the ability to go back through the video and proof the rough cut, make changes, add effects, tune audio and rearrange sequences in order to produce the finest video production possible. You just can't do this with the conventional video editing suites. The system requires a totally different mentality then the equipment that's been in use for the past decade," says Saunders.

Direct Results

Saunders feels it is imperative that the client get involved in the post production phase of their video, the result of which can be seen in a final product that is more realistic and closer to the values of the client. "Having this kind of control over production is a direct result of the new technology." Redstone Pictures is the only video company, servicing weddings and Bar Mitzvahs, to use Non-Linear Editing. "I feel non-linear is the only way to adequately service our clientele."

For more information call Richard Saunders at Redstone Pictures (416) 256-4666.

Adeer Kosher Catering offers the fabulous Hollywood Princess for your Simchas

Adeer Kosher Caterers is proud to announce that it is now catering kosher functions exclusively at the elegant Hollywood Princess Banquet Centre located at Keele and Highway 7.

The combination of this fabulous facility, with its eight spectacular ballrooms together with the exceptional service and fine cuisine of Adeer Kosher Caterers, makes this an excellent choice for any Bar Mitzvah/Bat Mitzvah or wedding.

From the moment your guests walk through the doors of the Hollywood Princess, they will be inspired by the beauty of the magnificent marble foyer, spiral staircases, cascading fountains and lush greenery. It's perfect for that special Simcha!

With seating for 100 to 1000 guests, the ballrooms feature high ceilings, spectacular lighting and breathtaking decor. The complimentary Bride and Groom hospitality suites are available for quiet privacy on your special day. The Hollywood Princess provides an exquisite background for family portraits and its picturesque foyer areas have been designed for just that purpose.

Adeer Kosher Catering owner Ester Klein says that she is enthusiastic about the opportunity for her customers to plan their Simchas at the Hollywood Princess. "It's close to the Jewish community, and I know our customers will be thrilled with the facility," says Klein.

Klein's Adeer Catering chef has developed a variety of exceptional menu alternatives well suited for modest right up to absolutely lavish affairs. Klein is proud of her flexible menu options, offering superb choices from traditional dinners to trendy buffets.

With entrées such as roast chicken with red onion marmalade, chicken with sun dried tomato cream sauce, beef with herbed Yorkshire pudding, beef with garlic mustard sauce, turkey in pear sauce, or cedar roasted salmon, Adeer is delighted to serve ordinary or out-of-the-ordinary meals in this five star facility. "Even our side dishes and vegetables are prepared to add a delicious touch to any meal," says Klein.

Ester says that she prides herself on making the host's job as easy as she can. "We offer lots of help to make the Simcha as worry-free as possible." She offers consulting to help arrange for such services as photography, florists, musicians or virtually any special needs.

Klein stresses that she understands how important it is to keep within a budget and that she never tries to talk her customers into anything with which they are not completely comfortable. "Not only do we give good value for your money, we want our customers to know that we work hard to give them delicious food, at a good price in a magnificent setting."

Adeer Kosher Catering at the Hollywood Princess will help make your Simcha truly unforgettable.

Shape, Shine and Glamour

by Joy Cherry

There's a new spin on that earlier period of elegance. Dinner at 8, and sounds of Benny Goodman's Big Band; dinner dressing, sweet notes of Ella and Frank — it's time to begin the beguine all over again.

We curvaceous, bosomy, zaftig, voluptuous real life females are the shape of things to come. Fashion designers are one and all making beautiful clothes for real live women; whether you're a 6 or a full 16, the clothes to come will shape and fit. As we say, "fashion is in heat", fallen head over heels for full busts and shapely legs. Bustiers are back, the push-up bosom is in. Watch for the cosseted, corseted, laced Louis XV bodice; obvious now and coming on strong for spring.

This time of the year is a renewal: end of one calender year, beginning of the new, and we instinctively reach toward the spring as an anchor to pull us through the dreary winter. Spring weddings give us hope, and the sense of renewal of our own commitments and those of the young.

The perennial question: What are you going to wear for your party? Just ask us and you'll have your very own fashion consultant. We will take care of all the details, organize the accessories and be a support in major decisions.

In keeping with the emphasis of shape, we've designed a group of exciting gowns for special events, weddings, bar mitzvahs, cocktail, or anniversary. Flirty organza dinner dresses, breezy chiffon evening dresses, and elegant ball gowns radiate a strong sense of drama and excitement. Crystal pleated chiffon tiered skirts and four-ply silk crepe gowns with long silk chiffon coats are also available in personalized sizes and colours.

On February 2, Joy Cherry will join Tiffany & Co. and the Granite Club in hosting a presentation for brides. A Tiffany's New York representative will do a presentation on the Tiffany table settings illustrated in the famous Tiffany book. We are excited to have the President of Tiffany's, Philip Taylor, who will lecture on diamonds and jewellery. Our bridal department will present an outstanding fashion show highlighting incredible dream-like gowns from the couture bridal collections of Vera Wang, Priscilla and Christos — all exclusive to us in Canada. This will take place in the Grand Ballroom of the Granite Club on Bayview Ave. For a complimentary invitation, please phone Carol Gold at 416-489-8809. When these three major energies (Tiffany's, Joy Cherry and the Granite Club) merge, a splendid time is guaranteed for all. See you at the show!

As I say goodbye to 1994, certain events spring to mind. One was my visit to the Holocaust Museum in Washington and a personal tour by its brilliant architect, James Freed.

The impact of the exhibit is strengthened by the architecture, which leads its visitors on a historical journey to silence. There are no right angles. Everything is torqued and twisted, from the skewed skylight to the glass block fissures in the floor of the central atrium, symbolizing the fracturing of civilization. The four towers on the north side evoke the watchtowers of the death camps, and the overdoors have the triangular point of the badge of the ghetto. I watched people of all faiths and colours silently moving through the exhibits, tears welling in their eyes.

This museum is a tribute both to the American government for its role in erecting it and to James Freed for making it "one with its contents".

New York, with its thundering heartbeat and absolutely inescapable energy, was a welcome relief from the emotional exhaustion of Washington. We had a wonderful roasted pompano at Picholine on the west side near the Lincoln Centre and an outstanding dinner at the Union Square Café. It was so great I bought their cookbook!

Right now your mind is in the present and we do have presents for you. Major renovations mean major sale — great values and special savings. Come, save, and enjoy.

Our cruise and casual warm weather looks are here, ready for you. Escada has just entered the front door with the first of the new spring collections.

And if you want to know What's new? What's next? And What's now? . . . . VISIT! We'll have a coffee and take a walk around the store.

Let's face this new year in style — together.

Remember to be naughty but nice.

THE FABULOUS HARVEY SEIGEL BAND
"Our name says it all"

When you want a successful event, call the Fabulous Harvey Seigel Band! Harvey and his band specialize in creating happy memories.

Since starting his first band at age 17, Harvey has played at thousands of simchas and special events. He knows how to make your Wedding, Bar or Bat Mitzvah, Anniversary, fundraiser or Corporate Event successful. "If you want happy guests says Harvey, "just hire our band and leave the rest to us." The Harvey Seigel Band often performs at CNE dances, Ontario Place concerts the Palais Royale, jazz festivals and cruises.

Music, Harvey believes, should please the ear — whether for dancing, or as background to dinner conversation.

The Band's repertoire appeals to all ages, spanning the decades from the '90's to the '30's: Top 40, Big Band or Swing, Jazz, Motown, Rhythm & Blues, Rock 'n Roll, Latin, Ballroom, Dixieland — and of course, Klezmer and Yiddishkeit. Harvey's trombone and vocal stylings are famous from New Orleans to Florida to B.C. to Paris.

No event is too large or too small. The Harvey Seigel Band is available in various sizes from a trio to a 15-piece orchestra.

The Band's vocal package is based on Harvey and a female singer, but often includes up to four vocalists. Dance to the music of Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett, Barbra Streisand, Stevie Wonder, Natalie Cole, Harry Connick Jr. and others. You'll swear they were there in person. It's like being at a Las Vegas revue.

Jazz enthusiasts will love Harvey's All-Star Band, featuring the dance music of Gershwin, Cole Porter, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, the Dorseys and others.

"Our clients book us again and again," says Harvey. "They know that I personally look after every event, as if it were my own. We thrive on a happy audience! We're always busy, because we offer what people want: world-class professional musicians and star-studded vocals; reasonable prices — and the fact that we look after our client's every whim.

"Music," Harvey sums up, "is our life. We love it; you'll love us." Book early; call Harvey at (416) 782-9202; fax 783-0793.

Alan Cherry Bridal ushers in a new era of elegance in Hazelton Lanes

One name alone evokes the cutting edge of fashion elegance: Alan Cherry. For over two decades, he has dressed the fashion elite in furs, leathers and formal wear. The recent opening of his new bridal salon in Hazelton Lanes is a natural extension of his desire to design for the bride, creating a unique art form in his gowns.

Alan Cherry began his design career while still young, apprenticing in his parents' east end store, and later attending Gallasos School of Fashion Design and the Ontario College of Art. His family, one of the oldest retailers in Toronto, is synonymous with innovation in style. He was the first retailer in Toronto to import styles by Giorgio Armani and Hugo Boss. The exclusive line of designer gowns at Alan Cherry Bridal will allow him to continue in this vein.

As the only salon in Canada carrying bridal fashions by Christian Dior, Alan Cherry Bridal will present a trunk show on Jan. 26 and 27 from 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Jan. 28 from 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., providing a preview of some of these exquisite fashions for 1995. Christian Dior representative Linda Pilon and Maria Arrigo, Vice-President of Alan Cherry Bridal will assist in the presentation. There will be informal modelling and refreshments.

Ever seeking the beautiful and unique, Cherry explains, "We search the market, travel at least two months out of the year. We are probably the biggest trend setter in Toronto; we're ahead of everybody." Buying trips include visits to such couture shows as the Paris Prêt à Porter, Moda Milano and Igedo. John Speziale, general manager of Alan Cherry adds, "We've scouted the world for the most magnificent gowns." Alan Cherry Bridal also carries St. Pucchi, Scaasi, Jim Hjelm, Fink, Galina, Diamond, and other leading designer lines.

The salon itself provides a beautiful and comfortable atmosphere, where the bride can feel truly pampered. Italian columns frame the hand-painted, frescoed cupola, making the bride the "centrepiece" as she leisurely tries a variety of gowns. Italian marble floors and antique-style furniture and mirrors with gilded, imported Venetian frames add a palatial air befitting such luxurious garments. Coffee, cappuccino, espresso and party sandwiches are always available.

Cherry sees the gowns as a type of sculpture in fabric — a costume for the bride's most romantic story. The selection of materials include silk shantung, silk brocade, duchesse silk-faced satin, silk organza and hand-beaded, re-embroidered alencon lace with Swarovski crystals. Styles vary as much as the brides themselves, with every gown designed specifically for each bride. Curved V-neck lines, dropped waistlines with roses and cascades of English net and cathedral trains come in shades of antique ivory with moss silk underlaying or white blush with white ice blue, to name but a few. Attendants' dresses come in rich vibrant colours of new plum, amethyst, iris, midnight blue, emerald, deep purple or claret. Alan Cherry Bridal has probably the largest selection of bridal gowns in Toronto, but it's also a one-stop bridal shop.

Cosmeticians are on staff for consultation and a hair salon from Hazelton Lanes will work with brides at the salon. Cherry emphasizes "one on one service, personal attention"; his staff are professionals, people that have been in the bridal industry for many years.

Mothers-of-the-bride can find their perfect dress, with the personal consultants and knowledgeable sales staff, in Alan Cherry's original store at 33 Avenue Road — still the destination of choice for dressy evening wear.

Bridal gowns, including those designed by Alan Cherry, are priced from $1,500. Accessories are custom-made: earrings, shoes, headpieces and veils. Speziale adds that lingerie is a specialty, and "only the most exquisite imported items" find their way into Alan Cherry Bridal.

All gowns pictured are Christian Dior for Alan Cherry Bridal

Thurs. January 26 & Fri. Jan. 27, 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m.
Sat. Jan. 28, 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

A fashion visionary, Alan Cherry is never satisfied with what he has done, always looking to bigger and better things. He expanded his interest in fashion into food with restaurant Lox Stock and Bagel, which has enjoyed such popularity since opening in the Lanes that lineups are common. Summer wedding festivities can be held on Lox Stock's outdoor patio, in the inimitable ambience of Hazelton Lanes. Cherry feels that "food and fashion are the same." Food has to be fashionable today, with both quality and finery.

Cherry will take fashion in formal wear one step further this year when he opens an exclusive men's wear store, to look after the needs of the groom and fathers of the bride and groom. They will be provided with pure silk and fine worsted tuxedos with beautiful accessories. The entire wedding party will look and feel regal and exquisite when dressed in Alan Cherry. It all adds up to the perfect wedding: Alan guarantees it.

Tarantino offers the ultimate in formal attire to discerning clients

If there's a dichotomy between a man's regular wardrobe and his special occasion wear, Marcello Tarantino doesn't see it. Tarantino views the tuxedo as an integral part of the wardrobe, not an afterthought.

Seen in this perspective, a tuxedo purchase offers manifold advantages: "You're prepared for the weddings, the bar mitzvahs and the black tie affairs that always seem to be just around the corner. Instead of worrying about what to wear — and scrambling into something at the last minute that'll have you looking like a stuffed penguin — you simply go into your closet and take out exactly what you need."

No small part of the benefit stems from the ease and confidence with which you'll wear a garment that was custom made or custom fitted in the finest fabrics available. From the Scabal ready-to-wear collection, Tarantino carries a large selection of mohair and wool formal attire in all sizes. Impeccable in quality and finish, these tuxedos and capes can be custom fitted by Tarantino's staff of eminently qualified master tailors. For the ultimate in comfort and fit, you can have your formal attire custom-made in silk or any of Scabal's other luxurious fabrics. Ready-to-wear garments run around $1600, while custom-made start at $2700.

Once you've attended to the tuxedo, it's time for the evening shirts, bowties and cummerbunds. Enter Italy's Stefano Ricci collection, whose legendary attention to detail makes it the world's finest.

Tarantino continues: "It's ironic that the special occasions we cherish can be one of our greatest sources of anxiety. If you're neither confident nor comfortable in your attire, the anxiety can rob you of the joy you're supposed to be experiencing. The right outfit, on the other hand, becomes part of you, an extension of your personality — a source of comfort and confidence."

If you require a suit or jacket for a less-formal occasion, you'll be well-served by Tarantino's distinguished selection of imported ready-to-wear men's wear and accessories. If you prefer made to measure, the shop enjoys an international reputation for bespoke tailoring.

The quality of the goods at Tarantino and the dignity with which they're presented suggests that for the discerning men who shop here, every day is a special occasion, to be cultivated and enjoyed in the appropriate attire. The environment is devoid of flash and bravado, and full of the quiet commitment that befits a maestro sarto.

Flowers of the World covers the bridal spectrum

Tuula Kivinen's credentials as a bridal flower consultant are impeccable: ten years in the flower business coupled with an extensive previous background in textile design and hotel management. The skills she's acquired in the process enable her to offer a wedding flower service second to none in the industry.

Custom-made chupah

From textile design, she brings a sensitivity to colour; from hotel management, an appreciation for the critical importance of service and the finer points of floral display. Elements of both are evident in the sprawling bridal consultation area of her charming studio.

There, in addition to some spectacular floral arrangements, you'll find a fully-assembled chupah; arches wreathed in vines and chiffon; "vine globes" perched on wrought-iron pedestals; a fully set dining table on which table flower arrangements can be demonstrated; and a myriad of accessories to choose from, like vases, wrought-iron candelabra, and candles.

Fabric swatches are expertly matched with complimentary colours, and the floral and linen arrangements can be colour coordinated as well. The shape and size of bouquets are carefully chosen to flatter the bride's figure and stature.

Tuula's expertise and reputation for making special occasions look truly extraordinary have brought her into virtually every synagogue in Toronto. Her total commitment to her clients extends well beyond the initial consultation and sale: she or a member of her team will personally visit the venue of the function to ensure that all arrangements and bouquets are made perfect. "Punctuality and quality are paramount," she says. "When we tell our customers not to worry, we really mean it."

With such dedication and craft, it's little wonder that Tuula's clients include royalty, the opera ball, and the Estates of Sunnybrook. But the royal treatment doesn't necessarily cost more; you'll find her willing and able to work within your budget.

And, with a fabulous selection of unique arrangements to offer, Flowers of the World truly lives up to its name.

Tricia Cochran — the "best thing that ever happened to a bridal gown"

In the world of fashion, there are thousands of designers, but only a few are capable of consistently creating a collection of couture quality. Tricia Cochran is one.

Elegant tea-length wedding dress in layers of romantic frothy silk georgette with hand ruched bodice and jewel neckline

Her bridal collection encompasses traditional, Victorian and contemporary designs with a varied selection of styles in each category. Fabrics for the collection include silk dupioni, rich duchesse, peau de soie, georgette and tulle. Tricia Cochran creatively combines these with fine French lace and Swiss embroideries.

The uniqueness of the collection is enhanced by the hand finishings which are soft and subtle: rouleau, beading, ruching, and appliqué are all handworked.

For Tricia Cochran the key is simplicity and each piece carries the signature of quality, fit and excellence which is the hallmark of a Tricia Cochran gown.

Many women feel that if they find the gown of their dreams, comfort is a bonus. Not so, says Cochran: "If you're not comfortable in your dress, then we haven't done our job properly."

From the sleekest modern silhouettes to the most elaborate Victorian forms, each Cochran piece makes the wearer feel good and look good. The bride can choose from an enticing array of exclusive headpieces and veils to accessorize her gown. The salon also carries a selection of silk shoes, which coordinate with the gowns.

Cochran's clients include the "who's who" of the community, but this demure lady is extremely down to earth, and her warm smile and Scottish burr will make you feel instantly at ease.

Her professional and understanding approach to the sometimes daunting task of purchasing a gown for such a momentous occasion makes the experience enjoyable and stress-free. She guides you through the maze of decisions with patience, expertise, and good common sense. She is genuine — not elitist — when she says "I enjoy working with people, and more so when they have an appreciation of fabric, quality and workmanship. I take it as a privilege to be entrusted with the task of crafting the bridal gown, being a special part of the wedding day celebration."

Gowns at Tricia Cochran are surprisingly affordable, due in part to the recently introduced three-level price range. This means that a gown chosen from the collection can be ordered as ready-to-wear in a standard size and then altered to fit. For those who prefer to have a pattern made and fitted to their measurements, level two provides the bride with a custom-made dress. Level three is a design service which entails creating an original design and custom making the gown especially for the client.

This year, Tricia is launching her first bridal party collection of ready to wear dresses and separates for attendants — contemporary pieces that can be worn again for other occasions. Prices for these Tricia Cochran exclusives average around $300.

Cochran comes by her sense of design and drama honestly. A graduate of the London (England) College of Fashion, she began her career creating costumes for theatre and television and then moved into the field of high fashion, where her handiwork graced Bond Street's finest stores.

She came to Canada with her longtime partners Muriel and Bill Williams. Together they have become a fifteen-year fixture in fashionable downtown Toronto. Cochran's obsession with quality has garnered a legion of followers — from the internationally renowned Bergdorf Goodman and the Royal Ontario Museum (which decided to acquire one of her creations as an example of contemporary couture), to the brides who wear her gowns. The letters and phone calls of thanks and praise are a lasting testimony to her talent.

Perhaps Cochran could be best summed up this way: As one of her brides once said, "Tricia Cochran is the best thing that ever happened to a bridal gown."

A talk with Cary Silber about the Art of Catering

Question:

When you cater a special event such as a wedding, what is the most important aspect of your work?

Answer:

You'd probably expect me to say the food. And essential as the meal is, it's really part of a larger whole. That's because every aspect of the event must be work hand in hand, from music and bar service, right down to the individual place setting. The cumulative effect of all these elements is what really sets an Encore event apart.

Question:

Does that mean that you put less emphasis on food preparation that another caterer would?

Answer:

Not less emphasis, no. After all, we are creators of fine cuisine, and that is our primary role. Our menus are researched, planned and created uniquely for each function, and of course our mandate at all times, is to provide the most sumptuous meal that we possibly can. What I mean by the cumulative effect is that Encore goes beyond the host's expectations, to provide more than fine food alone. Service, presentation, menu planning, ambiance all contribute to the enjoyment of the meal. In other words, no matter how wonderfully our chef prepares a salmon filet, for example, if the wait staff serves it too abruptly, or if it's not presented with the right side dish that compliments the taste of the fish then it will detract from the guest's enjoyment of the food. That's what I mean by a cumulative effect.

Question:

How do you get to know the wedding party so well?

Answer:

Only after a thorough consultation. Our staff is extremely flexible, and we work with the client. We want to turn customers into clients by making them want to come back again and again. Encore as you know, is French for "one more time".

Question:

What is Encore's most important message to anyone planning a wedding or special function?

Answer:

Not to let predetermined notions about cost and affordability affect their choice of caterers. Most of our clients are pleasantly surprised by the value that we offer and how creatively we can work within budgetary guidelines. Consultation is cost free and without obligation, so I encourage all your readers to call us.

At Regal Kosher Caterers, Joanne Katz makes service an art

For both innovative and traditional Kosher catering, Regal Kosher Caterers is a front-runner. So are King Solomon's Table, a fine dining Glatt Kosher restaurant, and the Wok 'N Deli Glatt Kosher restaurant, which operate in conjunction with Regal.

As catering manager, Joanne possesses both experience and a conscientious attitude. She has been kept busy booking weddings, bar and bat mitzvahs and other special occasions and is delighted and very proud of the goals that have been accomplished at Regal.

Regal's philosophy is simple. Quality is achieved through attention to detail, and to the wishes and needs of the individual client. Plan your wedding with Regal, and you will discover that service has been refined to an art.

Joanne is a bubbly personality who exudes high energy and enthusiasm while effectively fulfilling her role as catering manager. The many thank-you notes and praise she has received from a long list of delighted customers are testimonials to the service that is provided by Regal Kosher Caterers. Now she believes, as 1995 begins, is the time to express her gratitude to all of the clients who have contributed to Regal's success. "A positive attitude is easy," she reflects, "when you enjoy success, and are so appreciated." This article serves as her response to the many words of praise that have come her way.

The most effective advertising, Joanne insists, is referral from a satisfied customer; and she's pleased to report that Regal is heavily booked for the months ahead. These bookings include the wedding of Joanne's son, Steven, in May 1995. It seems reasonable to assume that word of mouth played a role in his choice of caterers.

Large, varied menu

Regal offers a large, varied menu, and something which matters just as much: quality of preparation. Selection is important, says Joanne, but to make it genuine, you have to have the talent in the kitchen.

Once and for all, Regal disproves all the old stereotypes of Kosher food. Along with tried-and-true standards like prime rib steak, there are many delicious Oriental, Middle Eastern and Continental dishes. Regal has talented chefs to serve both the catering division and the restaurants.

Among their pasta creations are Maritimes Taglialini, a mélange of fresh market fish, tossed with thin, long noodles with tomato wine sauce and herbs, and Tortellini Aurora, vegetable filled tortellini in light tomato herb sauce, with button mushrooms. For meat lovers, the chef recommends Pillard de Manzo, scallopini of tender beef, flash-grilled with shallots, herbs and extra virgin olive oil. Those who fancy something spicy will enjoy Cajun Chicken, grilled breast of free-range chicken marinated and seasoned Louisiana style.

As always, Regal is committed to making quality Kosher food accessible to everyone. King Solomon's Table offers an all-you-can-eat Chinese dinner buffet. At lunch, a version of this buffet with fewer items, but still all you can eat, is available.

Regal's offices and permanent Kosher kitchen, as well as King Solomon's Table, are located in the Montecassino Place Hotel at 3710 Chesswood Drive in Downsview. King Solomon's is available for business luncheons as well as private parties. The Montecassino Place Hotel offers elegant ballrooms for simchas and comfortable suites for guests from out of town, with attractive group rates and weekend and overnight packages.

At the Wok 'N Deli in Thornhill, the innovative Chinese, Delicatessen and full Continental menu enjoys ongoing popularity at lunch and dinner. Here, the world's most delicious dilemma (do you wok or do you deli?) continues to intrigue the patrons. Even during peak hours, lineups are brief, and the service is friendly and efficient. The Wok 'N Deli is located at 441 Clark Ave. West, at the corner of Hilda Ave.

Growing clientele

The management and staff of Regal Kosher Caterers are unanimous in expressing their gratitude both to the community, for its ongoing support of all three establishments — and to Joanne Katz, for pleasing Regal's existing and growing clientele.

Joanne asserts that working with her clients is "a privilege and a pleasure", and invites you to contact her at Regal Kosher Caterers. She will take every care to ensure that your wedding is a success. To book your special occasion, call (416) 630-0303.

"AT REGAL KOSHER CATERERS, THE FUTURE IS NOW."

With bookings extending well into 1996, at Regal Kosher Caterers we're prepared for the future. Just as '95 is here "before we knew it", that special day in your future will be there before you know it. One phone call to our catering manager Joanne Katz can get the preparation ball rolling.

Everything you need is conveniently under one roof: Fabulous ballrooms. Exquisite international cuisine (prepared on the premises in our permanent Kosher kitchen). Beautiful table settings. Comfortable accommodations for your out-of-town guests. A full-service Glatt Kosher restaurant (King Solomon's Table) right on the premises for your everyday dining. King Solomon's is also available for your smaller functions (up to 120 people) on Saturday night or Sunday morning/afternoon.

Give Joanne a call. She'd love to help you make your party very special. It's her privilege . . . and her pleasure.

Sam Firestone Caterers: Fresh Ingredients in a Family Tradition

For more than 30 years, Sam Firestone Caterers has had an unparalleled reputation for the best kosher catered affairs in Toronto. In their field, Firestone is second to none. Exclusive caterers to Shaarei Shomayim synagogue, Sam and his son and partner, Les Firestone, look forward to many more years of serving the community.

High standards are a family tradition, and have made Firestone famous. "Our agenda is threefold," says Les: "quality, quality and quality. Value for the dollar will never go out of style. If we put smiles on our customers' faces, we've done our job."

Menus are innovative, so that every party is exciting and unique — for the caterer as well as the customer. The selection ranges from traditional fish, fowl and meat dishes to vegetarian; and the Firestones keep pace with trends, including the growing preference for lighter, healthier foods.

When even kids are sophisticated, old standbys like hot dogs and fries will no longer do. Items like fajitas and Chinese food are available, as are children's buffets.

Menus are customized to suit individual needs and budgets, with price options ranging from lavish to modest. "You don't have to spend a lot," says Les, "to have a great party. We give extra, but we don't charge extra."

In the catering business, a great chef is indispensable. Executive chef Jimmy Lyras and his team, says Les, are an essential part of Firestone's success.

Both Sam and Les believe a low-key, no-nonsense approach works best. They attend to all details without fanfare, right down to the colour of the decorations if you wish. While Sam is active as a consultant, Les as catering manager does the hands-on work of meeting customers' needs, from the initial interview until the affair ends. Les is always the last one to go home.

Firestone is Glatt Kosher, under strict supervision of the Kashruth Council, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto (C.O.R.). There is a full-time mashgiach on the premises.

Although all catering is in-house, the banquet halls are also available to non-members of Shaarei Shomayim. Many non-members are attracted by Firestone's experience and reputation for quality and reliability.

Firestone caters all occasions: weddings, bar and bat mitzvahs, sheva brachot, organization parties, corporate functions and meetings, sports banquets, engagement parties and receptions.

Attractive dates go fast, so call early to book your wedding or other special occasion. Sam Firestone Caterers is located in Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, at 470 Glencairn Ave.; ask for Les Firestone at 782-8022 or 221-6329 (fax 789-1728).

Sam Sciarrino carries on the tradition of Horvath Studios

Stepping ably into the sizeable shoes of Tibor Horvath, who regrettably passed away in February '94 after a remarkable career, Sam Sciarrino is now continuing the 36-year tradition of Horvath Studios.

The transition is a natural one for Sciarrino, whose association with Horvath and the studio dates back to 1984. Hand-picked by Horvath to carry on the business, Sciarrino boasts a long list of photographic credits including Craftsman and Master of Photographic Arts (Professional Photographers of Canada) and Master of Photography (Professional Photographers of America).

A brief perusal of his award-winning work validates his reputation as a wedding photographer of choice. From the gauzy transparency of the sheerest veil to the grand sweep of a Scarlett O'Hara staircase, each detail is captured with stunning clarity, yet softly and romantically muted as befits the occasion.

Quality control of the printing process is a Sciarrino forté; many shots are reprinted several times until the desired effect is achieved. Since the state-of-the art lab he deals with is owned by his brother, it's reasonable to assume he has a "direct line."

Children's photos and portraits round out his portfolio, but weddings are a mainstay. Wedding shoots are usually "a family decision," says Sciarrino, with most or all of the adult family members involved in the consultation. Sciarrino's approach is low-key; if clients know what they want, he tries to execute their wishes and "let his camera do the talking".

That it speaks eloquently is evidenced by a multitude of return engagements at homes and synagogues throughout the city.

Sylman Photography

One... Two... Three...

When photographer Elliot Sylman sees that the people he photographs are having fun, he enjoys his work most. Although he has done commercial photography, most of his work is with people, at weddings and other simchas.

Elliot is a skilled craftsman who has done several showings, and is planning another in 1995. He does plenty of black and white work, and is one of the few people in Toronto to hand-color photos. Also this year, he will become one of the first in the city to introduce computerized custom coloring of black and white prints.

Important as professional skills are, they are only one half of success in any field, says Elliot. The other half is putting these skills at the client's disposal, and enjoying contact with people. His work often draws on his sense of fun, as when a client wants candid or humorous shots.

At the beginning of February, Sylman Photography is moving to a new facility at 495 Champagne Drive, near Dufferin and Finch. Four to five times bigger than his current location, this new facility will help him to serve his existing clients better, and to accommodate new ones. For information, please call (416) 635-6749

Brides save fabulous sums on fabrics at Nash James International

With none of the glitz and glamour of Toronto's ritzy bridal salons, and all of the character of the garment trade's rich history in this city, Nash James International's sunswept fifth-floor loft at Richmond and Duncan streets offers a cavalcade of exquisite fabrics for all members of the bridal party at wholesale prices.

The business that began with still-active founder Nash K. Parakh selling a half-dozen bolts of silk from the back of a beat-up Acadian has grown into the biggest silk importer in North America. Twenty-seven years later, his loft holds 5,000 bolts and the man who "doesn't believe in show business" still sits behind the same scarred oak desk acting as his own secretary and customs broker. He doesn't have a receptionist because "customers would have to pay for that, and everyone will tell you Nash James's prices are the best in town."

"Trying on the goods" is a relaxed experience at Nash James International

Hand spinning, weaving, and dyeing

All silks are hand spun, hand woven, hand dyed, and milled in Italy, France, and the Orient. Prices range from $6 a yard for "el cheapo" noile to $50-a-year French taffeta like that used in Lady Diana's wedding gown. Nash James stocks some 150 shades of solid douppioni, 50 to 60 stripes and checks in breathtakingly beautiful colours. Blouse weights, linings, and sheers are here too — if it's silk, Nash James has it.

Fabulous French laces make a beautiful gown

But silk isn't the only story here. An exquisite collection of French laces, brocades, and chiffon gives brides a dizzying selection of gown opportunities. Most brides come armed with a photograph of a wedding dress they like, purchase the fabric and then have it sewn by a designer of their choice. The result is a custom-made gown at a rock-bottom price.

Mothers-of-the-bride, bridesmaids and flower girls have a myriad of fabric options. Any woman seeking a special-occasion dress will be well-served here. The selection of French péne (cut velvet) is particularly outstanding.

It's a true family business, with Nash's son James and his wife Sheri completing the picture. They're friendly and helpful; you can truly relax here, and let your fancies take wing as you wander through the marvellous multitude of colours, textures, and patterns.

Tomè presents flowing 18th century bridal gowns

The bride and her wedding party will look resplendent in gowns custom made by Tomè Haute Couture, 1850 Avenue Rd., 256-5852.

Tomè's uses European fabrics such as Italian silk, satin, crocheted lace, dupioni silk and pure lace to create one-of-a-kind gowns that brides will be proud to wear down the aisle.

At the upcoming bridal show, Feb. 3 through 5 at the Canadian National Exhibition, owner/designer Thomas Koichopolos is featuring 18th century-look gowns, often off-white with bustles, hand pleats, corsetted bodices and light beading.

"Gowns are light and flowing and the off-white color give them a soft rich look. A lot of women are finding that stark white is a bit harsh in a wedding gown.

"Bridesmaids' outfits are fitted, simply cut flowing pants or skirts often made of soft lace. "What makes all our gowns unique are the finishing touches – an empire line with a scalloped edge, a hem trimmed in satin – something that will make the gown stand out. Tomè gowns are unique.

"We work from scratch. A woman can come in with a picture or an idea and I can sketch it to order. If she has no idea what she wants we discuss the budget she has in mind, take a look at the sample dresses on hand and then sketch some ideas. Everything is made by Thomas and his seamstresses, to exact fit and specifications. No outfit leaves the store until everyone is happy."

Tomè is open Mondays - Fridays, 10 a.m. - 7 p.m. and Saturdays 10 a.m. - 6 p.m. Appointments are requested but not necessary. Koichopolos suggests that brides come in at least three months in advance in order to have the time to design and fit a gown properly. The rest of the bridal party can come in about two months in advance.

Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto a wonderful wedding setting

Making sure that a wedding goes well involves hundreds of details. The Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto offers to take care of them all under one roof. The less stress on the wedding party, the more enjoyment for everyone – bride, groom, family and friends. The Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto hosts wedding parties of 40 to 250 people, starting at $75 per guest, plus 15 percent gratuity and 15 percent tax. The buyer knows the spending limit; the only uncertainty is how many guests to invite, and how many will come.

The Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto offers something special to the guests as well as to the bride and groom.

After 6:00 p.m., there is complimentary parking for the whole party. At 6:00 p.m., there is a one-hour cocktail reception with complimentary piano player, open bar and hot and cold hors d'oeuvres. This is followed by an elegant four-course dinner with imported wine, and a glass of sparkling wine for toasts. There is a four-hour open bar after dinner, and coffee and tea service at midnight.

The bride and groom may enjoy three complimentary nights at an Inter-Continental hotel in New York, Washington, D.C., Miami, New Orleans, Los Angeles, San Francisco or Maui. Or, there is the alternative of one free room on the night of the wedding for every $1,000 spent (before taxes and gratuities) to a maximum of ten. For example, if there were 100 guests at $75 each, totalling $7,500, there would be seven rooms for the bride and groom to offer family and friends at the Toronto hotel.

Rates start at $145 for a single or double room, with special rates during the winter months. Upon arrival on the wedding night, the bride and groom receive a complimentary suite and chilled champagne. Before setting out next morning on their honeymoon, they are served a continental breakfast (sliced fruit, Danish pastry, croissants and coffee).

If you wish, the Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto will organize every aspect of your wedding within the domain of the hotel, from flowers to entertainment. It is the catering manager's responsibility to do this, and make the festivities as simple, stress-free and enjoyable as possible for everybody.

If you just want to travel far from crowds and conventions, the Hotel Inter-Continental Toronto is for you as well. It is a "boutique hotel" for individual business travellers, families, intimates and small groups (and possibly a celebrity or two in search of privacy and quiet).

The Hotel Inter-Continental in Toronto is at 220 Bloor St. West, just west of Avenue Rd., across from the Royal Conservatory of Music. For more information, ask for the catering manager at (416) 960-5200.

Ritché's boutique steeped in history and success

The talent that has made Jack Ritché so well known in the bridal industry is the same talent that saved his life during WWII.

Captured by the Russians during WWII, he was sent to a Siberian prison camp. It was while interned there, that he was able to use his talents to captivate the Russian soldiers by making dresses for their wives and mistresses.

"He made such an impression on the Russians that he was offered a job in a Moscow fashion house after the war but anxious to leave Russia, he turned them down.

The training my father had been given in his family's tailoring business, kept him alive," says his daughter Vivian Prussky, who works in the family business.

Ritché returned home in 1946 to discover that his parents, brothers and most other relatives had perished.

In 1948, not wanting to remain in Europe, he and his pregnant wife, Helen, embarked on the long journey to Canada and on to a new life.

"He had to find work to support his wife and infant son and even though his English was minimal, he found a job at a Spadina Ave. custom tailor shop. Even then, however, sixty cents an hour did not go a long way, so after trying to better himself by changing jobs several times, he realized the only way to get ahead was to go into business for himself. Ritché Couture was born," says Prussky.

News of the talented man in the custom tailor shop at King and Bay spread quickly and eventually a customer approached him to design a dress for her daughter, who was about to marry the producer, Norman Jewison. "The bride realized my father's talents and suggested he open a shop on Bloor St., the soon-to-be fashion centre of Toronto."

Business on Bloor St. flourished and after becoming more renowned in the bridal business, Ritché was the first designer in Toronto to put on a full bridal fashion show. "These shows were so successful, they had turnouts of 800-1200 people. The bridal business was booming and my father was in the centre of it," says Vivian.

With the addition of Vivian and her husband Arthur to the business, Ritché became a family affair. "We are proud to be part of a business that has become a success through dedication and perseverance.

Ritchè is located at 1662 Avenue Road and 423 Richmond St. West.

In celebration of 43 years in business, Ritchè presents Spring /Summer '95 Fashions at the Inn on the Park Tuesday January 31st, 7:15 p.m. and 9:15 p.m. Free admission.

Expert kosher affairs at the Sheraton Centre

For over ten years, the Sheraton Centre Toronto Hotel has been the location of choice for hundreds of happy couples who want a luxurious alternative to a synagogue wedding.

"Many brides and grooms decide they want a traditional kosher wedding, but in a location other than a synagogue," says Tim Lilleyman, Director of Catering Sales for the Sheraton Centre Hotel. "The Sheraton Centre is an elegant, unique choice."

"Combine our dedicated kosher kitchen with our award-winning level of personal service, add your choice of recently-renovated function rooms and top off with our ideal location in the heart of downtown Toronto, and you've got a recipe for success. We've been hosting kosher events ...from weddings, bar and bat mitzvahs, cocktail parties, through to conventions, and gala evenings,... since 1985, every day of the week" (excluding the Sabbath).

The Sheraton Centre Toronto has a completely separate kosher kitchen, complete with its own china and flatware, strictly supervised by the Kashruth Council of Ontario. "The Kashruth Council's Mashgiach has the keys to our kosher kitchen, and is present during all preparations and for each and every affair," says Lilleyman. "So, it's not necessary to make the regular kitchen kosher each time."

The experienced and talented chefs offer creative and flexible menus to suit any taste. Both the kitchen and the serving staffs are accustomed to dealing with kosher affairs, and can easily and professionally handle any concern their clients may have.

Executive Chef Heinz Wagner has been with the hotel since the inception of the kosher cooking services. A past president of the Escoffier Club, an association of Toronto executive chefs, Wagner has been instrumental in creating exciting kosher cuisine in the city.

It should not be thought that the Sheraton is only for a grand wedding. Facilities and services are available to serve affairs of 200 people, to those of 2,000 people.

"We have facilities," comments Tim Lilleyman, "to fully service a kosher wedding, including being able to offer separate rooms for the signing of the contract, the ceremony, and the reception."

Indeed, and for those couples who request an outdoor Chupah, the Sheraton Centre Hotel has the perfect place: 2.5 acres of outdoor gardens, complete with waterfalls, right in the midst of the hotel. It is also a spectacular setting for portraits and family photographs!

"No matter whether your plans call for something extremely formal, or more relaxed, our team of Catering experts will ensure your wedding day is picture-perfect," states Lilleyman.

Out-of-town guests will enjoy the Sheraton Centre's convenient location, connected to City Hall parking, steps from exciting shopping, theatre and sightseeing. Kosher meals are also available through room service.

Personalized service, talented, experienced staff, your choice of facilities. An award-winning hotel with a dedicated kosher kitchen, located in the heart of downtown. No wonder the Sheraton Centre Toronto Hotel has been the alternative of choice to synagogue weddings for over ten years.

For more information, contact Tim Lilleyman, CCE (Certified Catering Executive) directly at (416) 947-4837.

TAKE YOUR NEXT KOSHER EVENT TO NEW HEIGHTS

In the heart of Toronto, the Sheraton Centre is always ready for a kosher affair. Our dedicated kosher kitchen has been creating magnificent menus since 1985. Accomplished chefs and experienced serving staff take pride in handling every kosher affair with flawless expertise. Elegant facilities can easily accommodate 200 people...or 2,000. For more information, contact Tim Lilleyman, CCE, Director of Catering Sales, at (416) 947-4837.

You want everything to be just right at your simcha

On the most important day in your life, you deserve the absolute best without compromise!

The finest cuisine, the best in service, the most beautiful and spacious facilities, all at reasonable prices. Beth Avraham Yoseph of Toronto together with Jacobs Catering offer you all of the above to make you simcha unforgettable.

Weddings are the primary affairs at BAYT. In fact the shul is geared towards them with its three areas for ceremonies which include the main sanctuary, the outdoor chupah garden, and the foyer (where a skylight will open to allow for a service under the stars). BAYT can accommodate from 50 to 1,000 for a sit-down in the banquet hall, and the Sisterhood hall downstairs holds up to 300 people. BAYT also offers a dairy kitchen serving up to 250 people. Three different bridal rooms are available for use.

For close to 40 years, Jacobs Catering has been known for its excellence in catering and personalized service. Owner Kalman Lowenthal and his assistant Doreen Greenspan work together to assist you at every step, right through the day of your party until the last guest has left.

Together with the experience of their European trained chefs they offer creative and flexible menus to suit any taste. Favorite dishes on the menu are from the most traditional to the most innovative. Entrées could include such items as medallions of veal with peppercorn sauce or grilled breast of chicken forestiere. Desserts such as chocolate opera cake on vanilla coulis with fresh berries or apple tartlet with fresh fruit sorbet lend the final touch to the perfect meal.

Prices at Jacobs Catering are competitive: one of Jacob's popular "package deals" for $50. per person includes bar, hors d'oeuvres, dinner and sweet table.

For more information contact Jacobs Catering, 613 Clark Avenue, Thornhill. Telephone: (905) 886-3832 or the BAYT Synagogue at (905) 886-3810.

Fairy-tale atmosphere at new, expanded L&J Bridal Boutique

L & J, a family-owned bridal boutique, has been operating in Brampton since 1975. Owner Angela named L & J for her two daughters, Lina and Joanne. On February 11, 1995, they will move from 100 Main St. North to a new store, also in Brampton, at 50 Queen St. East.

The new location will be on two levels. On the ground floor, there will be 3,000 square feet of evening wear, accessories, lingerie, hats and shoes, for the mothers of the bride and groom, and for guests. The second floor, also 3,000 square feet, will be devoted to the brides, with three bridal rooms, one for tulle and organza gowns, one for satin and one for silk.

L & J has built its business on dedicated commitment to the highest standards of quality. You'll find it all, from the most sophisticated to the very affordable.

There will be at least seven bridal consultants on the premises, as well as full-time alterationists to provide custom alterations. L & J will continue its tradition of personalized service, recognizing that no two customers are the same. Angela will continue to be as involved as she always has been, keeping her hand in to make sure everything is done perfectly.

The theme of the new store will be Romantic and European, with a fairy-tale atmosphere and decor. Most important is that the move to Queen St. is an expansion into a larger space, both to display gowns and special occasion evening wear. There will be a separate reception area, where the family members of the bride can relax; coffee and tea will be served — and champagne.

L & J imports many lines of dresses from New York, including Eve of Milady, Jim Hjelm, Scaasi, Alfred Sung and Demetrios; the Lazaro line, and many more, are available exclusively through L & J.

Much of L & J's success is based on referrals. Besides being known across Canada, from Halifax to Vancouver, L & J advertises in the U.S., and receives referrals from there. This steady expansion is one of the reasons for the move to newer, more spacious premises.

They invite you to come in and experience it for yourself. You can reach them at (905) 459-9370.

Five Diamond Kosher Cuisine Served at Four Seasons Toronto

In March of this year the Four Seasons Hotel Toronto broke new ground by offering kosher catering services for wedding receptions, bar and bat mitzvahs, cocktail parties, conventions, and elaborate dinners for 70 to 500 guests.

This property, located in fashionable Yorkville, is the only CAA/AAA Five Diamond Award-winning establishment in the city to offer these services.

Operating under the supervision of the Orthodox division of the Toronto Jewish Congress, and approved under the Kashruth Council of Ontario, each menu is custom designed.

Tamir Shanel, Director of Catering, and his team coordinate and oversee the services and execution. Their attention to detail is matched only by the culinary taste of Executive Chef Denis Jaricot.

Whatever the occasion, the staff at the Four Seasons will make it a success. Their incomparable standard of service and presentation is suitable for any type of function from the extremely formal to the relaxed and casual.

Famous for a tradition of uncompromising, innovative cuisine, the culinary masters at the Four Seasons will go to great lengths to assure your complete satisfaction by creating a personalized menu to meet your most exact specifications.

The Four Seasons Toronto boasts 12 spacious rooms to fit any occasion. However, the hotel is particularly proud of its elegant Regency Ballroom which seats 500. This setting provides an appropriate backdrop for many social and corporate events. Or you can experience a spectacular view of the city from Windows on the 32nd floor, with seating for 190.

Managed by Four Seasons Hotels and Resorts, this magnificent 380-room hotel, has won the accolades of critics around the world including: the CAA/AAA's Five Diamond Award, Institutional Investor's Best Hotels of the World, Condé Nast Traveler's Top 100 Survey, Successful Meetings Pinnacle Award, and Meeting & Conventions Gold Key Award.

Having been awarded so many honours for its outstanding hospitality, it's nice to know you can now get kosher meals in these elegant surroundings.

For more details call the Catering Department at (416)964-0411 ext. 4838.

Stavros Master Tailor offers only one level of quality – the best

Fine quality in men's wear must be experienced to be appreciated. The expert workmanship which goes into all garments from Stavros, Master Tailor and Shirtmaker, speaks volumes about the skill, care and attention to detail which have made this shop an international centre for elegant men's furnishings.

Stavros Theodoropoulos has been selling hand tailored, custom-made suits to the well-dressed men of Toronto and beyond for over 25 years. His is a rare art in today's computerized fashion industry.

Stavros imports all his material from England and Italy, where the world's top five mills are located. Different weights of wool are selected, depending on the season; a quick perusal of swatches and suit lengths reveals a multitude of custom choices. A full complement of accessories includes silk neckwear from Italy and the finest imported belts, socks and suspenders.

The attention to detail is another factor that sets Stavros' clothes apart. Lapel flower holders are painstakingly sewn on an angle so boutonnières sit straight; button holes are sewn by hand. The jewellery-like blazer buttons are imported from England. Shirts, which are also custom-designed to suit individual tastes, have mother-of-pearl buttons.

The same expert workmanship goes into his formalwear. Tuxedos come in fine wool or wool/mohair blends, which provide sheen, lustre and crispness. Pure Italian silk is used for facing on the lapels and to cover the buttons. All silk is sewn on by hand for a quality finish. A Stavros tuxedo lasts a lifetime, and will always be worn with pride.

The process of having a suit made by Stavros begins with a selection from one of their many suit lengths. The client is advised on a suitable style and a series of measurements are taken. Once the tailoring process begins, up to four fittings are made until the fit is perfect and comfortable. A pattern is made up for each client and kept on file. Stavros guarantees his suits for three years; complimentary cleaning is provided on his garment twice annually during this period!

At Stavros, there are not different levels of quality — only one. Says store manager Robert Kennedy, "everything that leaves the store is the best!"

Kosher Cuisine Served With 5 Diamond Excellence.

The Four Seasons Toronto, world-famous for its elegant cuisine, offers Kosher prepared foods for your special occasion. Whether it's a wedding reception, bar or bat mitzvah, cocktail party, or business convention, our sumptuous meals are fully prepared under the supervision of the Orthodox division of the Toronto Jewish Congress, and approved under the Kashruth Council of Ontario. And every plate is presented with the exquisite care and unequalled culinary taste of our Executive Chef. As well, we ensure your menu is designed to make the occasion an unparalleled dining experience. So remember the Four Seasons Toronto for your next Kosher function. Miller Entertainment Music for Every Occasion

If you're planning a party or a special event, and you want to keep your guests entertained with fun, laughter and music all night long, the Shelley Miller Band is definitely the right choice.

Shelley Miller has over 25 years of experience in the music profession. The band consists of Shelley as manager, leader and bass player, and features as vocalists his talented wife Sharon Smith-Miller, Jim Gillard and Robin Langdon, along with other vocalist/musicians on drums, guitar, keyboards and saxophone.

Depending on the size of your party and your budget, you can have the size of the band customized to suit your needs.

"Whether it's a wedding, bar mitzvah, anniversary, engagement, birthday or corporate function, we know and understand just how important these special events are for both you and your guests," says Shelley.

"We're here to make sure everyone will walk away with fond memories that will last a lifetime."

The Shelley Miller Band offers you fully rehearsed professional musicians and state-of-the-art instruments, lighting and sound equipment. They also provide one of the largest rosters of songs on the market, including top 40, rock classics, Jewish folk music and love ballads.

As an experienced band leader, Shelley will customize the music according to your preference. He will also assist with co-ordinating your event, from when the speeches are made to special introductions, announcements and candle lighting.

He will also inform the camera crew when something important or special is about to happen--like the horah or the bride dancing with her father--so they can capture the moment on video.

Shelley says: "We try to encourage family and friends to sing special songs at these parties, but we do appreciate advance notice, so that we can rehearse with them prior to the event. We really enjoy making everyone's dreams come true.

"It is important that you see and hear for yourself what you are about to buy. That's why we offer our clients the opportunity to come to one of the events we are playing at, while keeping in mind that the music is customized to meet the desires and needs of each party."

If you are unable to attend one of the parties the band is playing for, Shelley has audio and video demonstration tapes available for when he meets you to discuss the planning of your party.

Miller Entertainment now offers a new feature: a capella music (vocal only, without instruments) for Sabbath Day celebrations.

For more information on how you can make your party the most successful event of the year, call Shelley Miller at 481-1034.

Territories to remain closed

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM – The Israeli government has extended the closure of the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the wake of the Jan. 22 suicide bombing near Netanya that claimed the lives of 21 Israelis.

The cabinet decided Sunday to close off the West Bank for another week.

As for the autonomous Gaza Strip, the government said the closure would remain in effect until the Palestinian leadership lived up to the security commitments spelled out in its self-rule accord with Israel.

The government is continuing to explore the possibility of erecting a fence that would separate Israel from the Palestinians, and will now deploy dogs near the border to detect Palestinian infiltrators.

The closure prevents thousands of Palestinians from working at low-paying construction and agricultural jobs in Israel. The cabinet approved bringing in 6,000 foreign workers to fill those jobs.

Among those voicing support for the move was Uzi Baram, the dovish tourism minister, who told Israel Television he supported a permanent closure.

The government stepped up pressure on the Palestinian Authority by saying that workers from the Gaza Strip will be able to return to their jobs in Israel only when the Palestinian Authority starts taking meaningful steps against terrorists from the fundamentalist groups Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

The cabinet also extended its freeze on negotiations for the release of additional Palestinian prisoners and the opening of safe passage routes between the Palestinian self-rule areas of Gaza and the West Bank-Jericho enclave.

Parents of disabled call out to community

A cry for help

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

Zareinu pupil Jessica Silver, 5

TORONTO — Frustration is a constant companion to parents of seriously handicapped children and those who work with them.

Frustration at the constant search for funding, for services, for appropriate therapies.

Frustration at the community's hesitation to accord these children the dignity and respect that is their due, not just because they are disabled, but because they are members of our community.

Frustration at the endless, bone-numbing demands on their time, energy and resources.

SPECIAL REPORT

And frustration at the realization that the dreams for their children will remain just that — dreams.

Twelve-year-old Gerry (the names of parents and children in this article are changed at their request) has a chromosomal disorder that has left him unable to walk independently, speak or be toilet trained, and subject to seizures.

His mother Susan says he seems to comprehend what is said to him, and communicates somewhat using a word board.

'I cried for hours'

Gerry used to go to Zareinu, an educational centre for young Jewish children, but when staff there could no longer help him, he was transferred to a public school.

This was a blow to Susan, who is Orthodox. "I liked him being there, in a Jewish environment."

As Gerry gets older, Susan says, everything seems harder. Programs are harder to find, and when one does open up, it is farther and farther away. Funding is drying up, and she is concerned that what meagre facilities and grants are now available will be even further reduced.

Worst of all for Gerry, she says is "he doesn't have friends. People don't say hello to him, kids don't ask him to play.

"I guess they are uncomfortable — they don't know how to react."

Her reaction has been to take the initiative and find programs, people to help, money. "You always feel guilty — you always feel you should be doing something more to help."

Karen's 22-year-old son Mark suffers from autism, a severe developmental disorder that affects mainly communication and behavior.

She remembers being told, clinically and coldly, "your son will never be normal. He will always need a lot of care. Here is a list of preschools." He was two.

"I sat down beside his crib and cried for hours," Karen says. "I don't think I stopped crying for weeks."

But she did stop, and with the fierce determination that marks these parents, set out to learn all she could about this still misunderstood condition and become active in the Autistic Society.

The News In Brief
Everywhere

CANADA

Airborne No Longer

TORONTO — Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith are asking for an inquiry into the armed services following Defence Minister David Collenette's decision to disband the disgraced Canadian Airborne Regiment.

Congress called for an inquiry into how officers allowed the "deplorable racism and violent hazing" Canadians witnessed on a leaked videotape, and sought assurances that such incidents would not be repeated.

B'nai Brith welcomed the minister's announcement and urged that such an inquiry focus on systemic issues in the armed forces.

Volunteer honored

WINNIPEG — Lawyer Yude Henteleff was one of 23 individuals and four organizations named recently as recipients of the Citizenship and Immigration Ministry's Citation for Citizenship.

Henteleff was recognized for his work with the Learning Disabilities Association of Canada, through which he addressed the human rights of the mentally handicapped.

The Citation for Citizenship pays tribute to Canadians who have made exceptional contributions to the life of their communities by promoting freedom, justice, equality and respect for diversity.

Articles Sought

TORONTO — The Holocaust Education Centre of Toronto is planning an exhibition commemorating the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Europe by Allied forces.

The centre is seeking objects, photos and correspondence from or relating to experiences in displaced persons camps, evacuation marches and liberated concentration camps.

The exhibit will be on display for one year beginning April 12. All materials will be returned to donors.

For further inforation call Pnina Zilberman at 416-635-2883.

Fighting Racism

TORONTO —The Canadian Council of Christian and Jews (CCCJ) has organized an anti-racism bumper sticker program sponsored by National Grocers Company Ltd. during Brotherhood/Sisterhood Week from Feb. 12-19.

CCCJ will be distributing 25,000 bumper stickers across the country with the words "Hate Hurts: Say No to Racism."

Abe Arnold Honored

WINNIPEG — Writer and historian Abe Arnold was co-recipient of the sixth annual Manitoba Human Rights Achievement Awards for his work in combating discrimination.

The award was presented to Arnold and retired labor leader Ed Blackman by the Community Legal Education Association.

Arnold called for broader mandates for overburdened human rights commissions across the country in his award acceptance speech.

ISRAEL

New Green Line

JERUSALEM — A special ministerial committee will study how to implement full separation between Israel and the Palestinians, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin announced last week.

The committee will explore various possibilities, including the construction of a security fence near the Green Line, he said.

He said the committee would submit its first recommendations within two months.

PLO-Jordan Accord

JERUSALEM — Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat traveled to the Jordanian capital of Amman for his first meeting with King Hussein since Israel and Jordan signed a peace treaty three months ago.

Jordanian officials said the two sides had reached an understanding about control of Muslim holy sites in eastern Jerusalem.

The PLO acknowledged Jordanian custodianship over the holy sites, while Jordan backed what was called future Palestinian sovereignty in eastern Jerusalem.

Palestinian sentenced to life

JERUSALEM — The Nazareth District Court has sentenced a Palestinian to life in prison for the terrorist murder of Liat Gabai, a 19-year-old soldier, in Afula last November.

According to the charge sheet, Wahib Abu el-Rod, 26, went to Afula armed with an axe with the intent to kill a soldier.

He attacked Gabai on the town's main street, striking her in the head and body.

Soviet Jews Unhappy

JERUSALEM — Many of the 550,000 Jews who immigrated to Israel during the past five years from the former Soviet Union are settling into Israeli life, but most are unhappy, according to a new survey released last week.

The survey found that 86 per cent of new arrivals were employed, one-third owned their own cars and nearly 40 per cent had taken out mortgages to buy apartments.

But more than half the respondents said they were dissatisfied with life in Israel. Much of the dissatisfaction was attributed to their employment status.

Arafat Slams Islamic Jihad

JERUSALEM — PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat scorched Islamic Jihad for perpetrating the Beit Lid attack, which he said derailed a planned Israeli release of 1,700 Palestinian prisoners.

"No one has any right to use the Palestinian liberated land to carry out acts against the authority and the state," he said at a Gaza rally.

Arafat also accused Israel of exploiting what he called "every small problem" to impose collective punishment on Palestinians.

WORLD

Bombing Suspects Arrested

LONDON — Israeli diplomats and Jewish organizations are praising the efforts of British police, who arrested five people in connection with two bomb attacks against Jewish targets here last July.

The arrests came nearly six months after the July 26 and 27 bombings of the Israeli embassy and the offices of the Joint Israel Appeal. At least 18 people were injured in the two blasts.

The three male and two female suspects were being held in custody under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. Two were charged, one female. All are Palestinians born in Jordan or Lebanon.

Peres Pays Respects

BUENOS AIRES — Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres paid his respects to the victims of last summer's terrorist bombing and offered his government's support in an ongoing investigation into the attack.

Argentina's courts are still investigating the July 18, 1994, bombing of the country's largest Jewish community organization, as well as the March 1992 attack on the Israeli embassy here. The two attacks claimed more than 100 lives and injured hundreds more.

Women On The Move

NEW YORK — The rise of women in the "general" Federation hierarchy in both lay and professional positions is continuing a long-term trend, but growth at the top levels is concentrated primarily in the smaller communities.

That's the pattern revealed by a study undertaken by the Council of Jewish Federations. A total of 123 of the 187 North American federations responded to the survey.

Torahs stolen in Hungary

BUDAPEST — Seventeen Torah scrolls valued at more than $100,000 were stolen recently from the synagogue in the eastern Hungarian town of Debrecen.

Hecht to seek presidency of CJC

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Thomas Hecht of Montreal will seek the national presidency of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC).

Hecht, a veteran communal leader, will officially announce his candidacy in Toronto on Feb. 5, at a meeting of the CJC national executive committee.

If successful, Hecht, 65, will succeed Irving Abella of Toronto at the CJC National Plenary Assembly in May.

He would be the first Montrealer since 1989 — and the first European and Holocaust survivor, he said — to preside over the affairs of "the parliament of Canadian Jewry."

The last Montrealer to hold the post was Dorothy Reitman, who was president from 1986 to 1989.

In an interview with The CJN, Hecht said he decided to run after consulting with Jewish leadership, mainly in Montreal and Toronto. They felt that his multifaceted longtime involvement in the Jewish community made him well qualified for the post.

Hecht has been president of the United Israel Appeal and of State of Israel Bonds, and has chaired the Combined Jewish Appeal in Montreal. He has also held leadership positions at Ben Gurion and Bar-Ilan universities, where he founded the Begin-Sadat (BESA) Centre for Research Studies.

Hecht also said he is seeking the position for other reasons.

One is a sense of obligation he feels towards the Jewish community, without which "I could not have survived the Holocaust," he said.

Born in the former Czechoslovakia, he escaped to Canada in 1942 with the help of the Joint Distribution Committee.

A longtime lobbyist for Israel, he also believes that if elected, he could markedly increase CJC's role in Israel advocacy, in "cooperation" with the Canada-Israel Committee (CIC).

Five years ago Hecht, who has been Quebec chair of the CIC for seven years (a post he will soon relinquish, failed in a bid to win the CIC national chair.

"Many of the [CJC and CIC] activities overlap," Hecht said. "An important contribution can be made by Congress to enhance the Israel advocacy programs of CIC," he said.

Hecht, who is known for his conservative approach to the Middle East peace process, pledged not to let his personal views interfere with the CJC's public position strongly in support of the peace process.

Hecht said he would be an "active, hands-on" president working on the Canadian-Jewish agenda. He would decrease his activities as president of his Montreal pharmaceutical company, Continental Pharma, he said, and devote himself virtually full time to the post.

Thomas Hecht

Under his leadership, said Hecht, who is fluently bilingual, CJC would continue to "be at the forefront" in the national unity debate.

Hecht would continue to work on current domestic issues, such as combating racism and anti-Semitism, pursuing Nazi war criminals, and reaching out to small communities.

He would also like to see CJC establish a closer relationship with international Jewish organizations, with other Jewish communities around the world and with other Canadian cultural communities.

UJA '95 campaign goes over the top

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The 1995 United Jewish Appeal (UJA) campaign went over the top, despite increased competition for Jewish charitable dollars and the problems posed by an economy just climbing out of the recession, said Wendy Eisen.

"It's not a matter of raising funds, it's a matter of raising consciousness," said Eisen, who with Bob Masters co-chaired the campaign which raised $35.5 million.

To the energetic Eisen, the UJA campaign was a fresh challenge after her role as one of the leaders in the rescue of Soviet Jewry.

"This time it was not just raising voices on behalf of Soviet Jewry but raising funds to help pay for all the Soviet Jews who went to Israel, and that was harder," she said.

She believes the success of the campaign was due to the ability of the local Jewish community to renew itself, to provide new leaders to take the place of the old, and to broaden the base of its volunteer team of 2,000.

"For example, the names on our list of top givers changes every year, reflecting the hard times in a particular industry and the emergence of new lines of business. Fortunately, we have efficient and hard-working members of the Young Leadership Division who keep us in touch with these changes."

Another factor, she said, is the campaign's success in identifying more specifically why the money is needed to finance the services which result in the Toronto Jewish community's being considered as a model in North America.

"This [the campaign] is one of the few places where the whole spectrum of the Jewish community becomes involved, the Orthodox, the Conservative and the Reform, the left wing and the right wing, the hawks and the doves," said campaign director Mark Gryfe. "It's a great equalizer."

Wendy Eisen

Opening new doors to enable volunteers to become involved in newsletter production and other activities as an option to fundraising brought in fresh people with new ideas, said Gryfe.

Despite some adverse conditions, the Women's Division raised $3.9 million, the same as last year. Chair Barbara Bank attributed this to the division's ability to reach out to unaffiliated younger women, age 25 to 35, living north of Steeles Avenue and south of St. Clair Avenue.

At every level, lay people make the decisions on the allocation of UJA money to local agencies, whether it is the subcommittees who vet the original requests, the overall committees in the social, cultural and community fields, or the executive lay board, said Morris Zbar, associate director, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

Campaign '94 allocations

From the 1994 UJA campaign, a total of $38.3 million was made available. After campaign expenses, allowances for doubtful pledges, and other items, a total of $32.2 million was distributed. Half of this amount was sent to the Jewish Agency for Israel.

From the remaining half, the following allocation were made:

Education subsidies	$7,600,000
JIAS services for new immigrants	$1,320,000
Jewish Family and Child Services / needy families	$1,100,000
Jewish Vocational Service / day schools	$445,000
Immigrant Integration Program	$344,000
University and college students	$331,000
JFCS / Chaplaincy	$121,000
Hot meal program - Bernard Betel Centre	$68,000
Reena Foundation programs	$53,000
Jewish Camp Council scholarships	$45,000
Senior Care	$31,000
Jewish cultural committees	$27,000
Jewish Book Fair	$15,000

Additional funds were allocated for other cultural, social and educational purposes.

Memories of Auschwitz haunt Holocaust survivor

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — "For us there was no liberation, no victory," said Auschwitz survivor Avrum Feigenbaum. "The Allied armies had a victory, and by coincidence some of us were saved."

Fifty years later, Feigenbaum told a hushed audience he will never truly be free of Auschwitz; it still haunts him. And he is dispirited by the thought that the Allies could have done more to save Jewish lives, such as bombing the railway tracks to Auschwitz or its crematoria.

"There was no roof over Auschwitz; the world knew what was being done to the Jewish people and others, but refused to do anything about it."

Feigenbaum's real liberation came years later. "The first time I felt free was when I arrived in Canada at the age of 31 and the immigration officer said, 'Welcome to Canada.' That was the first time someone said I was welcome."

Feigenbaum and fellow survivor Stephen Bleyer spoke for those who were silenced at Auschwitz, those whose bodies were seen in the gritty, black-and-white images of a film taken by the Soviet army in January 1945.

The archival footage of sunken-eyed people behind barbed wire, of gas chambers, crematoria and common graves, was used to begin a commemoration of the liberation.

Sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) and the Montreal Holocaust Memorial Centre (MHMC) the service was attended by an overflow audience at the Cummings House auditorium.

Bleyer, who was 14 in 1945, also stressed that his day of liberation was not one of joy. "The concept of freedom and the idea of a new life were not within the capacity of comprehension of those walking skeletons. Anguish and fear were the dominant feelings. Survival was very uncertain for many ... on that dreary January day."

Bleyer, president of the MHMC, will dedicate this United Nations-declared Year of Tolerance to teaching the younger generation the consequences of hatred and "enforced conformity" and the value of diversity, freedom and social justice.

"Cultural diversity, instead of being celebrated as beneficial in humanity's social evolution, is imputed to be the cause of many of our present-day conflicts," he said.

"I believe we have to teach our history and learn from the past. We have to remember the events that we would much rather forget."

CJC Quebec region chair Manuel Shacter said Jews and non-Jews share responsibility for combatting Holocaust deniers.

Shacter referred to the lack of progress in the prosecution of Nazi war criminals. "The survivors, in sharing their painful memories, sought to ensure that those responsible for the murder of so many innocent men, women and children not go unpunished.

"In this regard, we are all too aware that justice has not been entirely done. We must not allow the perpetrators of these heinous acts to escape justice."

Shacter said if there is any lesson from the Holocaust, it is to strive for mutual understanding.

"Our experience as Canadians at managing conflict and at building relationships between communities is a model upon which the world can build."

Israeli Consul General Daniel Gal quoted the words found on a scrap of paper amid the ruins of Auschwitz. In Yiddish, the 14-year-old boy had written: "Even if all the continents were covered with paper and the seas were filled with ink, it would not be enough to express our tragedy."

Among the many messages the Jewish community has received, those from Prime Minister Jean Chretien and Premier Jacques Parizeau were read.

Some of the province's most prominent politicians were present, including Vice-Premier Bernard Landry; the Quebec government's member responsible for Montreal, Camille Laurin; Liberal leader Daniel Johnson; and Montreal Mayor Pierre Bourque.

During the reciting of the K'El Maleh Rachamim and Kaddish by Rabbi Michael Kramer and Cantor Yaakov Motzen, some in the audience sobbed.

The event ended on a hopeful note with the singing of the Partisan Song, Hatikvah and O Canada.

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer Fred M. Catzman has been researching their origins over the past few years. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

LACKSTONE

My friend, Serle Lackstone, gets his name from a shtetel named Lukshtany.

NISKER

Aaron Nisker of Toronto writes that his father was born in Toronto, but that his grandfather was born in Poland with the surname Nisky. He bears a distinguished name which is shared by my illustrious friends, Max and Ab, both engaged in the investment business.

Poland boasts of several shtelech, which may have given birth to the Nisker clan.

There is Nisko, near Stalowa Wola in south-eastern Poland.

There is also Niski Grad in north-eastern Poland near Lomza and we should not overlook Nieszkow in southern Poland.

A Nisker of Ukrainian origin would owe his name to the hamlet of Nizki.

Syrian soldiers prevent Jewish leaders' visit

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — When the KLM flight touched down at the airport in Damascus, most of the passengers deplaned without any trouble. But heavily armed troops who surrounded the aircraft prevented a group of about a dozen North American Jewish communal leaders from leaving the plane.

Instead, it was towed to a remote corner of the airport, kept for 3½ hours and finally allowed to depart for Amman.

Irving Abella, president of Canadian Jewish Congress, was one of the members of the Jewish group on board. Like his American associates, he had looked forward to meeting with government officials, academics and business leaders in the Syrian capital.

The "get acquainted" trip to Syria, followed by visits to Jordan and Israel, had been arranged through travel companies in Syria and Israel with the approval of Syrian officials. It had been seen as offering the Syrians the opportunity to demonstrate to the world that it was opening its doors to Jewish visitors.

Irving Abella

But two days before the scheduled departure, "the Syrians cancelled the group's travel visa, saying our group was problematic, that we weren't tourists and we were not welcome," Abella said.

For the Congress president, the incident reflects a division in Syria between uncompromising hardliners and more moderate hardliners. "The less hardline ones lost."

Abella believes the incident "makes clear what the Israelis have to deal with in Syria and the difficulty of making peace with a government that is not prepared to allow visiting groups of Jewish leaders in for 1½ days."

The Jewish group included lay and professional federation leaders and community centre officials from the United States. Abella was the only Canadian in the group.

Following their unceremonious departure from Syria, the group continued on to Jordan, where the reception was quite different.

"As cold as it was in Syria, it was warm in Jordan," Abella said. Where the Syrians were closed, obsessive and secret, the Jordanians were open, hospitable and welcoming.

People in Jordan are anxious to experience the benefits of peace, particularly though investment and business opportunities. "They want the economic benefits of the peace process [and they want them] yesterday," Abella said. "They're very impatient."

Travelling to Israel next, Abella found a pervasive "mood of despondency." The country is experiencing "deep divisions and concern" over the wisdom of the peace process, he said.

It was during a visit with Palestinian leaders in Ramallah that the group learned of the suicide bombings that claimed 19 lives. The Palestinians, who are associated with the PLO, were "quite concerned and quite apologetic," Abella said. They were worried that the attacks would make peace more difficult.

But at the same time, the Israeli media reported that other Palestinians rejoiced at the carnage.

"It was quite disturbing," Abella said.

JCC's debts to be paid off

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — After months of uncertainty, it appears the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) has a new lease on life.

Late last week, an Ontario Court judge approved a proposal that will see the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto pay off much of the JCC's debts and allow for the JCC's reorganization into three independent entities.

The planned reorganization and liquidation of debt is expected to take place towards the end of February, said Robert Harlang, spokesperson for Richter and Associates, the JCC's court-appointed receiver.

The Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto will bankroll the reorganization to the tune of about $13 million. The Federation has already poured almost $2 million of emergency funds into the JCC to help pay its creditors and keep operating.

In giving the green light, Judge James Farley noted that the JCC's creditors had voted nearly unanimously on Dec. 16 to approve the proposal and that the only alternative would be bankruptcy.

Earlier, Farley heard from lawyers representing Richter, the JCC's terminated employees, the JCC, the Federation and the public trustee.

Agnes MacNeil, representing 16 of the fired employees, told court her clients would not file a formal objection to the proposal. "By allowing the proposal to go forward it can serve a healing process and others in the community can assist them in getting their lives together," she said.

MacNeil later told The CJN that, on average, the employees would get only about half of what they would otherwise be entitled to under the common law, which is based on sufficient funds.

Dana De Sante, representing the public trustee, told the court he was concerned about an apparent "misapplication of [endowment] funds by the directors of the JCC."

De Sante also expressed concern over a term of the proposal that would see the JCC's former directors released from personal liability for their apparent "breach of trust" in misapplying the endowment funds.

He said in situations involving "a breach of fiduciary duty or breach of trust, usually you have a hearing or an investigation to see if the individuals acted reasonably or fairly. None of that has been done here."

Judge Farley noted his concerns but said it would have been helpful had he raised them earlier.

Commenting on the court approval, BJC spokesperson Howard English said "we've passed a tremendous milestone. This is the second last stage (pending closing of the deal) before the horrors of the past are behind us. It is another indication that the BJC is in good health and on the road to complete recovery."

Under the proposal, the Bloor branch of the JCC will be taken oven by a members group, which will attempt to raise $5 million, $3 million of which would go to pay the JCC's bank debt, the remainder to upgrade the building.

The Valley branch of the JCC on Leslie Street will also become independent and raise $1 million towards payment of the JCC's bank debt.

"We anticipate a bright future ahead for these important educational, recreational and cultural institutions," said Bernie Ghert, president of the Federation. "Together with the JCC's creditors, we have all worked very hard to develop a plan which we hope will satisfy almost everyone."

World WIZO marks its 75th anniversary

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — The 75th anniversary of World WIZO was kicked off at Israel's Knesset last month during an executive plenary attended by the Vancouver-based president of Canadian Hadassah-WIZO.

Judy Mandleman attended the Jan. 16 to 19 plenary, at which 85 delegates attended sessions on the peace process, absorption of immigrants and, most importantly, on family violence.

Israel WIZO chair Helena Glaser prepared a report on family violence given by Mandleman to The CJN. In it, 200,000 women and 500,000 children in Israel are reported to "live in the shadow of violence.

"It stems from Israel's patriarchal society, a symptom of social struggle characterized by inequality," Glaser writes. "There are no such thing as battered women. There are only battering men."

WIZO, the Women's International Zionist Organization, has made prevention and treatment of family violence its mission for 1995.

Its message is being circulated through Israeli television, posters and dramatic leaflets. "This is a war," Glaser said.

WIZO-Israel is planning to add to the family violence treatment and prevention centres now in Ramat Gan and Jerusalem with facilities in Ashkelon, Hadera and Netanya.

The roughly 50 WIZO federations around the world, including the Canadian one, have launched a fundraising campaign for the centres. Israel's labor ministry will help cover operating costs.

Parents of disabled children face many burdens

[Cont'd. from page 1]

Mark spent his younger years in Adventure Place, a facility for which she has only praise. Adventure Place takes children up to six.

After a disastrous stint in public school special education classes, Mark went to an adolescent boarding school where he still lives part time.

For Karen too, government cutbacks are giving her sleepless nights, particularly since his current home is theoretically only for teenagers. There is no place else for him and others like him to go.

It is getting harder to take him out because he may scream and lunge, and that scares people, even though Karen knows he is harmless.

"My husband and I are getting older. We are tired out — and not just physically," she says.

Avraham Friedman, supervisor of patient resources for Jewish Family & Child Service (JF&CS), recognizes the tremendous burdens carried by families of such children. JF&CS offers counselling, access to services, camps and programs, information, respite care and financial aid.

It will also arrange foster care for parents who simply can't cope.

At Zareinu, which teaches young children with physical, developmental and learning challenges in a consciously Jewish setting, co-directors Carol Goldman and Marion Goldmintz believe that Jewish children with special needs deserve a Jewish education whatever their abilities.

A staff of full-time, on-site psychologists, speech pathologists, music, communication, occupational and physical therapists and special education teachers evaluate and assist the children, run infant intervention programs, and provide advice and support to families.

"The daily stresses of having a child with disabilities can be overwhelming," Goldman says.

Parents are encouraged to be partners with the school so they will become advocates and what Goldman calls "effective consumers" for the children.

The Endowment Fund of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto funds Zareinu's augmentative communication program, which provides such assistive devices as talking machines and word boards, but this falls far short of the $22,000 total tuition cost per child.

The shortfall is made up through fundraising by the school's board of directors, and by the popular Zareinu Dollars program. The school receives no government or other community funding, but no child is turned away for financial reasons.

The families and professionals were asked for their views on the recent second degree murder conviction of Saskatchewan man Robert Latimer. Latimer admitted to asphyxiating his severely handicapped 11-year-old daughter Tracy to end her pain.

Those interviewed were sympathetic to his desperation, and the professionals looked at the case as a warning to be watchful for signs that a family has reached the end of its rope and needs extra intervention. Nevertheless, they universally condemned his actions.

"Sure you get tired and worn out," Susan says. "But that doesn't mean you love them any less. He took a life. How did he know the child was in pain? He was in pain."

Karen wanted to know "if [Latimer] gets enough sympathy, is that going to make people look at the disabled differently, just when we are finally getting some understanding? Will people say, 'If it is OK for him [to kill his child], then it's OK for others?"

Rabbis give support

Both the Vaad Harabonim of Greater Toronto and the Toronto Board of Rabbis (TBR) have issued statements supporting those parents and institutions that help severely handicapped children.

Rabbi Wayne Allen, president of the Toronto Board of Rabbis, called Zareinu "a paradigm of how as Jews we are commanded to look after the needs of the physically and developmentally disabled. We must recognize that their lives are as equally precious as our own."

The Vaad Harabonim, through its president Rabbi Moshe Stern, said that "parents who find themselves with handicapped children are challenged in ways most of us will never know or understand. Their great courage, patience and love reach heights that can only be admired."

Both rabbinical organizations said the Jewish community needs to do more to provide the resources necessary for handicapped children to lead productive lives.

The Vaad and the Toronto Board of Rabbis both denounced the actions of Robert Latimer.

West Bank fence to be examined

During Sunday's cabinet session, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin authorized Police Minister Moshe Shahal and Finance Minister Avraham Shohat to examine the security details and economic ramifications of establishing a fence around the West Bank to separate Israelis and Palestinians, a proposal Rabin first floated in the wake of the Beit Lid attack.

Agriculture Minister Yakov Tsur said a separation of the two peoples could lead to a Palestinian state. "Today 'separation' has security implications, in barring [Palestinian] workers," he said. "But separation could be in the Palestinians' own interest as well. In the long term, it will mean setting borders, removing settlements, and, indeed, the formation of an independent Palestinian entity."

Dogs will now be used along the border with the West Bank and at roadblocks to prevent Palestinian terrorists from infiltrating Israel and to detect explosives. Israel has avoided using guard dogs in the past because of their association with Nazi concentration camps.

During Sunday's cabinet meeting, Meretz minister Shulamit Aloni lashed out at Rabin for his recent hard-line statements, saying they serve only to set back the peace process.

Rabin retorted that Aloni was busy serving Palestinian interests, while he was occupied with Israeli ones.

Rubenstein set to visit Kelowna

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

KELOWNA, B.C. — The Okanagan Jewish Community (OJC) will be host to Eli Rubenstein, representing the United Israel Appeal (UIA) in Toronto, at a Shabbat weekend Feb. 17 and 18.

The program will begin with a Friday night service and discussion led by Rubenstein, followed by a Saturday morning service.

On Saturday evening, Rubenstein will lead a program of Yiddish storytelling, and a fundraising session will be held for the UIA. On Sunday, Rubenstein will tell Yiddish stories to the children of the OJC Hebrew school.

Orit Katzov, the UIA shaliach from Vancouver will also attend.

Mel Kotler, of the OJC, says his organization "is appreciative of the efforts made by UIA to reach out to the smaller communities and get them involved in Jewish programming."

Israel-Diaspora relationship concerns CZF

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The scheduled topic was Jewish continuity, but participants in the recent annual Canadian Zionist Federation (CZF) conference expressed more concern about their future relationship with Israel than with any loss of identity in the Diaspora.

"The Diaspora considers itself definitely connected to Israel," said Allan Nutik, "but we're not sure of the reverse. We want to know what the connection of Israel to the Diaspora is", especially among the younger generation.

Nutik, president of the Congregation Shaar Hashomayim Men's Club (one of the day's co-sponsors), said North American Jews are confused by the seemingly conflicting messages from Yossi Beilin, Israel's deputy foreign minister, and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Prof. Julien Bauer, who led a workshop on Israel-Diaspora relations, complained that Beilin has left the impression "we don't need you or your money."

However, David Kofsky, past president of the Labor Zionist Alliance, suggested Beilin is confronting the old model of Diaspora-Israel relations that is not appropriate today when most Jews are Zionist and Israel is moving toward unprecedented stability and independence.

There was no disagreement that the gulf between young Diaspora Jews and Israelis appears to be widening. For many, simply being Israeli is enough Jewish identity, Bauer said, but among North Americans who are neither particularly religious or Zionist, it's hard to feel Jewish.

Israeli Consul General Daniel Gal responded that Israel wants to strengthen its relations with the Diaspora, but toward a more equitable partnership. Israel wants to be seen as "a country of opportunity," not only one needing charity, he said.

"People have traditionally asked: What can we do for Israel? We would like them to now ask: What can we do in Israel?"

Gal noted that Israel's Gross Domestic Product grew by 7 per cent last year and per capita income has reached a very respectable $14,000 (U.S).

"We don't want Jews to just come to Israel to take photos of the kindergarten where they give money. We want you to share in our life," he said.

He suggested the formation of a "Jewish peace corps" in which young Diaspora Jews and Israelis would volunteer for a year together in troubled Jewish communities, such as the former Soviet Union.

Rabbi Stanley Peerless, principal of Hebrew Academy, observed that Zionist education in Jewish schools is failing to instil in children "a concept of Israel as an inherent part of Jewish identity — central to our lives." Then there are the other 50 per cent of Jewish children who do not attend Jewish schools and may not be reached at all, he added.

The CZF itself came under scrutiny, with the day's guest speaker, Clive Lawton of London, director of an organization fostering Jewish continuity, pronouncing that it and the other Zionist federations in the world had had their day.

During a workshop, some participants felt the party system is outdated and one should be able to join the CZF directly without a partisan affiliation.

Israeli folk dance company to perform in Mexico City

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — North America's oldest and largest Israeli folk dance company has been invited to participate in one of the world's major Israeli dance festivals.

The Sarah Sommer Chai Folk Ensemble will travel to Mexico City in March to take part in the Festival Aviv Carlos Halpert and present works selected especially for the occasion.

"It's a dream come true not only for Chai but also for the community in Mexico City, which has extended an open invitation to our group for the past five years," says Casey Chisick, Chai musical director.

The relationship between Chai and Festival Aviv artistic director Guillermo Treistman was established in 1991 through the Shalom Dancers in Vancouver.

"They told us what a wonderful dancer and choreographer Guillermo is," said Marshall Miller, Chai's artistic director. "We contacted him directly."

Since then, Treistman has twice been to Winnipeg to choreograph original pieces for Chai and Chai has performed works choreographed by Treistman for his own group, Ma'agal CDI of Mexico City. Last summer members of Ma'agal came to Winipeg to perform with Chai in the annual Folkorama festival.

The Winnipeg troupe's artistic staff members have twice been to Mexico to observe Festival Aviv. This year's trip by the whole ensemble has been largely made possible through the generosity of the Jewish Foundation of Manitoba.

The festival runs for four days and features exhibitions and competitions highlighting a range of Jewish dance from the horahs of the Israeli pioneers to interpretations of biblical themes set to classical or rock music. The premier Mexican groups and international groups perform as special participants.

In addition, over 25 junior dance troupes from Mexico's Jewish community centres, day schools and synagogues — the Shorashim (Roots) — participate in the event.

For Chai, this will be its first performance outside Canada and the United States. It will also be the first time the Festival Aviv has had a dance group performing to live music. Chai is the only Israeli folk ensemble in North America which features live singers and musicians as accompaniment.

A false dichotomy

The victims of the Beit Lid bombings had been buried less than a week when the editorial writers of "Canada's national newspaper" decided yet again to hector the government of Israel. In a puzzling, if not perverse, sweep of logic they determined that "withdrawing Jewish settlers from the West Bank" was "the obvious next step" for Mr. Rabin to take in the wake of the killings. "The options are clear" concluded the editorial, "settlements or peace?"

This dichotomy, however, is false.

The Oslo agreement, the Washington declaration and the Cairo accord are all predicated on good faith, bilateral negotiations between the PLO and the government of Israel. Among the many issues they have agreed to negotiate is the question of border adjustments. By definition, this means considering whether, how and where Jewish people will live in an autonomous or independent Palestine. The parties have never agreed that Jewish people will be forbidden to live near or among Palestinians in Palestine.

The Beit Lid bombings were perpetrated by Islamic Jihad. Jewish settlements are not the cause for which they kill, nor the motive of their hatred. The Jewish state is. They are violently, unalterably opposed to the very concept of a Jewish state. In this passion they are joined by Hezbollah and Hamas.

At this stage in the bloodied process, "the obvious next step" for the government of Israel is to ask whether the PLO still represents the majority of Palestinians; and if it does, whether it can control those Palestinians who hate Jews more than they love their own brethren.

For the love of fairness

Last week in Ontario, a five-member Royal Commission on Learning released its report entitled For the Love of Learning. The report was hailed as sensible and pragmatic. It called for a back-to-basics approach to education with appropriate balance and emphasis on teacher development, early intervention and streamlined bureaucracies.

The report also commented on the question of public funding for independent schools. That it did so, without being formally asked to, indicates the issue could not pass conscience without comment. "[We] believe a serious public airing is exactly what's needed...To tell the truth, we ourselves were divided on the question, and we now leave it to others to resolve it a later stage."

The commissioners very eloquently stated their conclusions. On the subject of equity in funding, albeit in reference to the public and separate school boards, they wrote that "it [is] the clear responsibility of government to ensure an equitable amount of funding to each student in the province so that each is able to receive comparable services and programs."

In similarly unambiguous terms, they expressed the educational worries of minorities. "Like Franco-Ontarians, First Nations are very concerned about the survival of their cultures and languages. They fear their children are failing to develop a better sense of their identity...".

Applying the logic of the commission, one is led to the conclusion that Jewish and other religious school students have as much right to "comparable services and programs" as do other publicly-sanctioned minorities in an attempt to ensure the "survival of their culture and language".

For the love of learning and for the love of fairness, we urge the government of Ontario to provide public funding to the independent schools.

A parent's tears

In this week's CJN, we explore humbly and only at the edges, some of the issues raised by the heart-breaking predicaments in which many parents of severely disabled children find themselves. We offer no prescriptions. Jewish tradition is our guide: every individual a human being, every human being a universe of wants and of needs, of dreams and of aspirations.

We do however express the hope that within the community there are the resources and the will to provide as much support as possible for families in need. A parent's tears sadden us all.

Report did include Jews who convert

I read with interest the letter sent by Brocha Shizgal (CJN, Jan. 19) entitled "Questioning Establishment Attitudes," and I understand her concerns regarding Jewish unity and the role of information to educate our community. I would like to clarify two points of misunderstanding which the letter expressed, as the information referred to by Ms. Shizgal was taken from a report prepared by the Community Planning Department of Federation CJA.

Firstly, the census data does include Jews who have converted to Judaism, as mentioned in the original article by Janice Arnold. It may not necessarily include those who converted out of Judaism. This is an important point, because the goal of Federation CJA is to include as many members of the community as possible in our demographic analyses.

The breakdowns for Jewish Day Schools give us an indication of the percentage of children who enrol in our school system. The intent was not to divide the Jewish community into different groups but rather to show that still more efforts can be made to encourage enrolment in Jewish schools, particularly among certain sectors of the community.

All in all, statistics are an important tool for making informed planning decisions, allocating resources and taking the pulse of the general state of our community. I do agree with Ms. Shizgal that figures should promote understanding and not division.

Questions video on "chick's" trip

Re: "Chick's trip from pen to plate," by Leila Speisman, CJN, Jan. 5.

In her article, Ms. Speisman describes a video released by Empire Kosher Poultry on the steps taken to produce kosher chickens. Ms. Speisman praises the producers of the video for having "resisted the temptation to be graphic." She compares the video with others that "are so bloody and detailed that viewers come away with nightmares."

It is unfortunate that Ms. Speisman would prefer to shield from viewers the truth about the actual slaughter process. That viewers have nightmares is indicative that there is something profoundly disturbing and brutal about the mass killing of defenceless animals. I would predict that the video similarly does not illustrate the unnatural lives of these chickens, who are debeaked, confined, crowded and highly stressed. Without this side of the story, the video is incomplete and it cannot possibly be "an excellent teaching tool."

Teacher charted maps while Prince hunted

The Soncino English Talmud displays a map of Babylonia, which is the work of my maternal grandfather, Prof. Jacob Obermeyer, ZTL, an awesome task carried out under the most extraordinary circumstances.

In his privileged position as tutor-companion of Persian Crown Prince Abbas-Mirza Naib Assaltana, brother of then-reigning Shah Nasir Eddin, Prof. Obermeyer received permission to utilize the frequent hunting trips of the young prince for his own purpose of map charting and was even provided with an armed escort to protect him from marauders.

Thus, while the royal Arab pupil and his companions searched for game, his Jewish teacher produced a unique map for posterity! March 21, 1995 marks the 150th birthday of my grandfather.

Supports Rabbi Riskin's stand on funds

The CJN (Jan. 19) criticized Rabbi Shlomo Riskin, the Chief Rabbi of Efrat, calling his comments "irresponsible and dangerous," and implying that he was guilty of "Sinat Chinam." Nothing could be further from the truth. The thousands of Jews who have the privilege of knowing the rabbi through his educational activities and weekly articles published internationally, can attest to his love for all fellow Jews.

I do not recall The CJN criticizing Prime Minister Rabin for his repeated irresponsible and dangerous statements, denigrating in the most unsavory terms the 150,000 Jews in Judea, Samaria, Gaza and the Golan. Rabbi Riskin was, of course, not advising donors to refrain from supporting local causes. He was referring specifically to Shimon Peres' "United Jericho Appeal" from which the PLO will receive at least $75 million (US) this year. Rabbi Riskin has joined many other Jewish leaders worldwide who wish to avoid this debacle. Thus, funding should be directed to specific projects in Israel, especially those in Judea, Samaria, Gaza and the Golan.

Says afterlife central to Jewish prayers

In his letter of Dec. 22, Rabbi Reuven Bulka says that the major concern in Judaism is not the afterlife but this world. Nevertheless, the former is not a minor concern for Orthodox Jews. Rabbi Bulka quotes part of Pirkei Avot 4:22 to bolster his point. Yet elsewhere in this verse, and in the previous one, the afterlife, not this world, is exalted. And one recites before each chapter of Pirkei Avot an excerpt from a Mishna, which states that all Israel have a share in the world to come.

The daily Amidah and Birkat Hamazon prayers call attention to the afterlife. Rashi begins and ends his commentary on the Torah with references to the afterlife (Genesis 1:4, Deuteronomy 34:2). According to Maimonides, belief in the resurrection of the dead is one of the 13 principles of Judaism. And the coming of the Messiah, the yearning of many Jews, is but a prelude to the resurrection.

It is a sad irony that Jews, much of whose history is a litany of misery, should minimize the afterlife, when it is such a powerful source of inspiration. It is a religious irony that the concept of the resurrection, which is of paramount importance in Christianity and Islam, is derived from Judaism, and yet it is Jews who are least concerned with it.

EVERY INDIVIDUAL A HUMAN BEING

A trip of hope to Jerusalem

By DR. MITCHELL PARKER

"Why would you want to send a retarded child to Israel? You could fly him to Montreal and tell him it was Jerusalem. He would never know the difference."

This was one of the comments I received when I first began planning to take a group of teenagers with developmental disabilities to Israel. Luckily, remarks such as this were in the minority. Instead, people were generally supportive and enthusiastic. Parents, travel agents, airline officials, the staff at Camp Ramah in Canada and other teenagers lent their verbal and financial assistance. As a result of these combined efforts, Aviva Silverman and I had the unique privilege of accompanying two boys and two girls, ages 17 to 19, on their first trip to Israel. Plans that were initially discussed with the four of them when they were campers in Camp Ramah's Tikvah program in the summer were realized when they boarded the plane on Dec. 19, 1994.

During our too brief stay, we visited the old and new cities of Jerusalem. We prayed at the Kotel and mourned the victims of the Holocaust at Yad Vashem. We stood at the top of Masada and swam in the salty waters of the Dead Sea. We mingled with Israelis in the outdoor Ben Yehuda mall and in the largest indoor mall in Jerusalem, as well as in the bustling Dizengoff Square in Tel Aviv. We strolled along the Mediterranean and admired the deep blue waters of the Sea of Galilee from atop the Golan Heights. We moved slowly and cautiously through the underground crusader tunnels in Acre and marvelled at the stalactite and stalagmite formations in the cave of Absalom. We prayed in Orthodox, Conservative and Reform congregations. We sampled the many foods of the Middle East.

Throughout the trip, we were impressed by the diversity of the land of Israel and its people. Everywhere we went we were welcomed and accepted graciously.

Each day we were together I recalled the words of the skeptic. How much of the trip would they remember? Did these young men and women have the capacity to understand the uniqueness of the State of Israel to the Jewish people? In fact, I will not know for several months which experiences made lasting impressions upon the participants and how these experiences have permanently affected their Jewish identities. Nonetheless, by observing their reactions to the sights and sounds of the country and perceiving Israel through their eyes, I am already confident that our visit had much more of an impact upon them than just another field trip or family vacation.

Ryan, for instance, seems to have been particularly struck by the spirituality of the land. Quiet by nature, he did not hesitate to proclaim his wonder that all the signs had Hebrew letters as our plane was approaching the terminal at Ben Gurion airport. (In contrast, he had said almost nothing during the 15-hour trip from Toronto.) He already knew that this was a special land. Ryan left his favorite baseball cap in his suitcase and chose to don a kippah which he bought on the first day of the trip, in a shop in the old city of Jerusalem. He wore it wherever he went. Ryan struggled with the words of the message he wanted to leave to God in the chinks of the Kotel, and he proudly proclaimed that when he came home he wanted to observe Shabbat! Perhaps the most precious moment occurred when Ryan was approached by a beggar asking for money for Shabbat. Without hesitation Ryan took out his wallet and gave the man a dollar — the only money he had.

The Tikvah group standing in "the light of Jerusalem."

Each of the teenagers was affected by Israel in a unique way. Larry, whose mother is Israeli, attempted to speak Hebrew with every Israeli he met, even though he probably had an active vocabulary of fewer than 100 Hebrew words. He proudly displayed what he knew by initiating conversations. He was eager to identify with his people.

Carrie, a remarkable young woman with Down's Syndrome, was almost overwhelmed by everything she saw and did. She travelled from peak experience to peak experience.

Debbie enjoyed making special contacts. She looked forward to meeting Israelis, visiting old friends and making new acquaintances. For her the Jewish people became the Jewish family.

I look forward to spending some time with my travel mates in the next few months, reviewing scrap books and admiring photographs of the trip. I am interested in hearing about their recollections. Most of all, I am grateful to them for allowing me to share with them their first trip to Israel.

Camp Ramah in Canada has offered Jewish educational and recreational programing for children throughout Canada and parts of the United States for over 30 years. Now, for the second consecutive year, this experience will be available for teenagers with developmental disabilities.

The program, which is called Tikvah, is modelled after similar Tikvah programs which have operated successfully in other Ramah camps for many years.

Comparative law: On passive euthanasia

By RABBI MARK DRATCH

Recently, we have been witness to a young woman with Lou Gehrig's Disease pleading with the courts to enable her to commit suicide, a father killing his paraplegic daughter, and a mother taking her own life along with that of her disabled son. Our hearts break for their suffering. Because of them, and cases similar to theirs, euthanasia, mercy killing, death with dignity, and quality of life have become buzz words in our debates about how to care for our sick and dying, and legislators have begun to discuss laws that would allow such actions as assisted suicides.

Does Jewish law permit ending the life of a suffering person? The answer is unconditionally no. All authorities agree that "Thou shalt not murder" (Exodus 20:13) prohibits the active shortening of any life, regardless of its viability or quality. The more significant question debated by religious authorities is that of passive euthanasia, i.e., whether it is permissible to withhold medical treatment from a dying patient. While this is not the place for detailed halachic reasoning, and certainly not halachic decisions, it is important to discuss this pressing issue.

Three biblical verses serve as the source for the requirement of medical care: "He shall cause him to be thoroughly healed" (Exodus 21:19); "Thou shalt not stand by the blood of thy neighbor" (Leviticus 19:11); and "Thou shalt restore him to himself" (Deuteronomy 22:1). (See Baba Kama 81b, 85a and Sanhedrin 73a.) We may not rely solely on Divine Providence to cure us, but must seek human help to return us to health and to save our lives.

There are halachic authorities who view this obligation as absolute. For example, Rabbi Eliezer Waldenberg says there are no situations in which medical care, even the most extraordinary, may be withheld from a patient (in Tzitz Eliezer VIII, 15.3.16; IX, 47; Ramat Rachel, no. 5 and no. 28). This prohibition is based on the fundamental theological assumption that since one's soul is not his own but, rather, the property of God, a person does not have the right to destroy it, and must do everything to protect and further the life that God has granted him.

There is, however, another view which, while forbidding one to actively hasten a person's death, permits the removal of impediments to it. Rabbi Moshe Isserles (Rema) writes in Yoreh Deah 339:1: "If there is anything which causes a hindrance to the departure of the soul, such as the presence near the patient's house of a knocking noise, such as wood chopping, or if there is salt on the patient's tongue, and these hinder the soul's departure, it is permissible to remove them from there because there is no act involved in this at all but only the removal of the impediment." Thus, there are occasions when passive euthanasia may be condoned by Jewish law.

Rabbi Moshe Feinstein holds that when there is no cure for a patient's condition, and continued treatment would merely extend his pain and suffering, such treatment may be withheld (Iggerot Moshe, Choshen Mishpat II, 73, 74, 75). Rabbi Feinstein argues that the healing obligation is operative only when healing is possible and that it is no mitzvah to extend the dying process. He further argues, based on Rema's gloss, that if one is permitted to withdraw circumstances which inhibit the departure of a person's soul from his body, one certainly is not obligated to introduce new means which would delay death. Rabbi Feinstein finds support for this opinion in the Talmudic account, Ketubot 104a, concerning the death of Rabbi Judah the Prince:

Seeing the pain of her employer and knowing his disposition, Rabbi Judah's handmaid determined that, in his present condition, he would not want to live. She interrupted the prayers of the rabbis, thus allowing Rabbi Judah to die. We learn from this account that the obligation to save someone's life is based on the presumption that he wants his life to be saved. However, if a patient makes known that this is not his wish — and he is mentally competent to make such a decision — the lifesaver has no obligation toward him.

In line with this opinion, the Rabbinical Council of America has issued a health care directive form, which a person completes to indicate preferences if he should, God forbid, become terminally ill and treatment would merely extend the process of dying.

The anguish faced by patients and their families dealing with the issues we have discussed is real, and at times unbearable. Fortunately, our tradition has provided guidelines which help families make difficult decisions, support them in times of crisis, and protect the safety and integrity of the most vulnerable in our society. There are circumstances in which passive euthanasia may be compatible with Torah values. Certainly both competent halachic and medical authorities must be intimately involved in determining each case on its own merits.

As Isaiah (25:8) prophesied, so we pray, "May He destroy death forever; may the Lord God wipe away tears from every face, and remove from all the earth all insult against His people; for the Lord hath spoken."

About dice and myths

The journal called Eretz-Israel contains archeological, historical and geographical studies and is published in Jerusalem by the Israel Exploration Society. In volume 24, Prof. William W. Hallo of Yale University published an article entitled Games in the Biblical World. It deals with dice, which are traced to prehistoric Pakistan, the home of the Indus Valley culture.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

From there, the little six-sided cube spread westward and eventually reached the Near East and the land of Canaan, the future home of the Jewish people. All of this happened before the year 2000 BCE.

The rabbis were therefore right when they considered gambling with dice as a foreign vice and found a passage in Psalms to back up their condemnation of such activity, although they never outlawed it completely.

The ancient dice were sometimes arranged like their modern counterparts — with each of the opposing sides having the sum of dots adding up to seven — thus five and two, one and six, three and four. But others had different kinds of arrangements, though the basic idea was the same.

There was also a board game called Asha which was known to the Jewish community of Cochin in southern India. "According to the recollections of an aging member of this community," Hallo writes, "the game was played only by women, and even by them only once a year, during the first day of Tisha b'Av." (If any readers can render an explanation for that, I would like to know.)

While the dice and other board games travelled from east to west, it is different with one game familiar to everyone who has played dreidl at Chanukah. This comes to us from England and dates back to the beginning of the 18th century. The inscribed letters were originally represented by T, A, D, and N, standing for the Latin words total, aufer, depone, nihil — meaning all, take away, pay, nothing. The game was adopted by Jews, and the Hebrew letters nun, gimel, he, and shin were inscribed on the four sides of the dreidl. These originally represented the Yiddish words equivalent to the Latin and later became Hebraicized into the sentence, "Nes gadol haya sham" (a great miracle happened there), referring to the miracle of the Chanukah lights.

Miracle of the Chanukah lights

On another issue, somewhat less amusing, I came across a book entitled The T. S. Eliot Myth, written over 40 years ago by Rossell H. Robbins. Eliot is not frequently quoted these days, but a generation or two ago he was considered one of the finest English poets alive — and his supporters made sure that some of the less desirable aspects of his writings were hidden away.

Unfortunately, as Robbins shows us, they were many, and here is one example taken from Eliot's Burbank with a Baedeker; Bleistein with a Cigar. Baedeker was the most popular guide book to the world's great cities and is carried by a respectable gentile; while Bleistein does not need the Baedeker because he has his cigar. The two men visit Venice and admire its glory. Here is Robert Graves' possessive description of the piece:

"Burbank (the gentile) sees the strength and wealth of Venice departed, the remnants of her glory enjoyed by an upstart Chicago Jew who probably started life as a furrier's apprentice.

Burbank sorrowfully pictures the rialto of other days. The rats are underneath the piles now, and the Jew (the eternal Shylock), is the rat of rats. The jew (Jew is written with a small initial letter like rat) is a rat because he has made money and because for some reason Jewish wealth, as opposed to gentile wealth, has a mystical connection with the decline of Venice."

This, alas, is not Shakespeare's Shylock, who at least had some attractive and redeeming qualities, but an image spawned by out-and-out anti-Semitic propaganda.

Perhaps it will be just as well if Eliot, who died in 1963, does not make a comeback.

Canonical debate

A canon is a body of documents which has become part of a sacred tradition. The Hebrew Bible is one such body which contains a large number of books within its sacred precincts.

By Arnold Ages

The rabbis of the Talmud were instrumental in determining the contents of the biblical canon. It was their support which made the Book of Ecclesiastes part of the Hebrew Bible.

The word canon is being tossed about a great deal these days. The university world is awash with bitter controversy over this term and how it is being applied to the humanities curriculum.

It is easy to dismiss the debate as irrelevant. The battle over the literary canon, however, is no ivory-tower debate but an early warning for society in general.

For the past 10 years there has been a concerted effort on the part of a coalition of academics to alter the liberal arts and humanities curricula by dislodging the literary and intellectual canon that has been at the core of western universities for 300 years.

Proponents of the new radicalism argue that the traditional university canon is peopled by dead white European males (DWEMs, for short), whose fame was the product not of some native genius, but of the connivance of imperial European economic interests. In this perspective, gauging genius through the judgement of history is replaced by economic values.

The assault on this canon pivots around the value of literature. The new criteria have it that all literature is of equal value and that there must be a level playing field for all entrants. Thus the Bible must be removed and Shakespeare has to go, according to the new academic centurions. They say Montaigne, Swift, Goethe, Moliere and another two or three dozen DWEMs who have "monopolized" the university curriculum are to be replaced by women, minority and Third World writers.

This is affirmative action applied with a vengeance to the world of art, literature and ideas. As Mrs. Astor is reported to have said on the Titanic: "I asked for ice but this is too much."

One man has been fighting a brave rearguard action against the attack on the traditional canon: Harold Bloom, an academic whom I salute for his recent book, The Canon, in which he explores why western literary traditions must be protected.

Bloom's vision is 20/20 in his defence of Shakespeare and the other immortals of western literature, and in his dissection of those who promote economic (read Marxist), gender, color and political tests for admittance into the humanities curriculum. Bloom's knowledge of world literature is intimidating, and he writes with panache.

Aside from his controversial views on the Hebrew Bible — too eccentric to reproduce here — Bloom's eloquent justification of the traditions of western European culture is a much-needed antidote to the current blitz against those who helped, through their creative spirits, to shape the consciousness of modern society.

Arnold Ages, a professor of French at the University of Waterloo is the director of the university's journalism option.

What to put in a resume

I used to have a resume that sparkled, full of all kinds of high class qualifications to do all kinds of things that I don't do anymore. In fact, I'm glad I don't do them, at least for now.

By Erica Meyer Rauzin

I am qualified to run a publication, but I am running a household. I am credentialed to cover the political or government goings-on at big league conventions and celebrity events, but my credentials are no help at the PTA, where the only cum laude that matters is cookie baking and envelope sealing, and the only celebrity is the principal.

As I conclude another day of chauffering, cheffing, cleaning and — in the garage in my "spare" time — merrily freelancing at the computer, I remember my years in the journalistic and administrative workplace with mixed feelings.

I loved the challenge of being a reporter, and the sense of involvement that came from working for the government, but my best job was being a magazine editor, which I did for eight years up until our second child came along and I went home to be a penny-pinching Mom who writes instead of a salaried writer who Moms.

Each year of my magazine job had 12 great moments: the instant each month when the magazine came back from the print shop, pristine and new, the moment it rested in my hands as a fresh accomplishment, the moment before I opened it to find the inevitable typographical glitch. But I loved shaping a publication, deciding on its contents and its artwork, creating a full package for readers. On the other hand, I don't think I could return to the deadlines, the pressure, or the 60-hour weeks. Today, my deadlines come from carpools and columns, my pressure is preparing Sabbath dinner, and my weeks aren't measured in hours, but in the years that fly by as babies turn into little kids, and little kids turn into big ones.

Deadlines come from carpools

So I still have a resume, and on the firm conviction that mom work is just as valuable as office work, I have rephrased part of it:

Job Title: Domestic Logistics and Lifestyle Coordinator.

Skills and Experience: Schedule Supervision, Transportation Management, Psychiatric and Medical Services, Chef (both Gourmet and Budget), Chauffeur (both Jeep and van, singly or in carpools), Carpenter, Plumber, Electrician, Kosher Consultant, Wardrobe Procurement and Refurbishment, Laundry Engineer, Landscape Architect, Tutor, Trainer, Athletic Consultant, Animal Husbandry, Equipment Maintenance, File Clerk, Typist and Supply Sergeant.

Education: High School: Child of two people; College wife of one person; Graduate School: Mother of three people. (My actual graduate degree only counts these days in our garage-slash-office, but the Mom-degree counts all over the house.) Extra Curricular Seminars: Current or former ownership of three dogs, two hamsters, two cats, one bird, and multiple dead fish; outside experience with horses; nodding familiarity with milking a cow.

Requirements of Employment: Senior Partner requested to provide assistance in the kitchen, complementary home maintenance activities, movie excursions on Sunday nights, an occasional kind word, and complete independent management of intrusive insects, major machinery and taxes. Junior partners required to cooperate cheerfully in necessary tasks and maintain a civil tone of voice.

Professional Ambitions: To continue in present occupation permanently or at least until all the drawers are arranged neatly, all the closets are cleaned out, and all the kids are trained to brush their teeth without prompting, whichever comes first.

Life is hard in the Arava desert

Sheldon Kirshner visits a kibbutz which seemed threatened by the peace process.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Hillel Tobias, the outgoing treasurer of Kibbutz Yahel, remembers the unbearable tension.

"We were really very nervous," he recalled. "We had spent 18 years of blood, sweat and tears building this place."

His fellow kibbutznik, Laura Sperber, nodded her head. "We were in a situation of uncertainty."

Yahel, founded in 1976 as a joint venture of the United Kibbutz Movement and the Movement for Progressive Jewry, lies 65 kilometres north of Eilat, in the arid bleakness and raw splendor of the Arava desert.

Last summer, as Israel and Jordan crept toward the peace treaty that was eventually signed in October, rumors swept through Yahel and its belt of sister settlements in the region.

"We were concerned we'd lose part of our land to the Jordanians," said Tobias, a native of Cape Town, South Africa who made aliyah in 1980.

The fear was that Israel would give up territory claimed by Jordan and thus deprive Jewish farmers of some of their choicest fields, upon which they depended for their livelihood. The settlers of Yahel were particularly concerned, since 500 of the acres they farmed were technically beyond the Green Line in Jordan.

According to Tobias, Israel had unilaterally moved the border eastward into Jordan in 1974 because the soil there was far superior. "The grass seemed greener on the other side," explained Tobias.

The farmers of Yahel planted dates, pomelos, tomatoes, peppers, onions and watermelons, produce that is exported to Western Europe during the winter months. "Seven and a half million dollars of our income comes from those fields," Tobias said. "It would have been a major economic blow if we had lost those 500 acres."

The uncertainty that hung over Yahel last summer was exacerbated by the government's disinclination to discuss the matter with the anxious settlers. "No one was willing to tell us what stage the [peace] negotiations had entered," said Sperber, a former Long Island, New York resident who's in charge of the regional data processing centre in Yotvata. "All we were told was that it would be OK."

Not until the very last moment were they informed of the news. As part of its treaty with Jordan, Israel would relinquish 116 square miles (300 square kilometres) to Jordan, leasing back a portion of it under a special 25-year arrangement. Much to its relief, the status quo prevailed in Yahel, and, as Tobias tells it, "we did not lose a square inch."

Sperber was optimistic that Israel and Jordan would eventually come to terms. "I don't think I could have lived here had I thought there was no hope for peace."

But she is under no illusions. "It'll take at least a generation to achieve real peace. There is a lot of deep-rooted antagonism, and it's going to take a long time for people to change their fundamental attitudes. Things can and do change, but it ain't easy."

Now that peace officially prevails along the Jordanian frontier, Israel's longest, Sperber is cautiously hopeful that Yahel's 10 bomb shelters will, as in the past, be used for recreational purposes.

Since the Six Day War, the Arava has been relatively free of terrorist border incursions, and Yahel has never been attacked. However, Yahel's Reform neighbor, Lotan, 15 kilometres south, was the scene of an incident in the late 1980s, in which two women were taken hostage and one Arab intruder was killed by an Israeli sharpshooter.

With peace finally a reality, Yahel hopes to capitalize on its close proximity to Petra, the fabulous Nabatean ruin in Jordan carved out of the jagged red and purple Edom mountains.

If a border crossing into Jordan is built in the vicinity, Yahel wants to get into the tourist business on a really big scale, offering travellers food and lodging and guided tours of both sides of the desert. "Our strategy," explained Tobias, "is to increase our means of production. We're working on several projects."

Yahel, with about 220 members including children, has never turned a profit. It continues to rely on grants from the Jewish Agency and assistance from the Reform movement and Toronto Jewry through the medium of the United Israel Appeal and Project Renewal.

Hillel Tobias and Laura Sperber. [Sheldon Kirshner photo]

The Jewish Agency has poured millions of dollars worth of allocations into the kibbutz, while the Movement for Progressive Jewry has provided funds for Yahel's synagogue, library, youth hostel, landscaping and educational projects.

From Toronto, Yahel has received subsidies for adult education programs and furniture and equipment for its youth lounge and seminar centre.

Yahel is at the mercy of external donors because the pillar of its economy, agriculture, is basically unsteady.

"Farming in the Arava is one of the last pioneering things you can do in Israel," said Ariel Immerman, the South African born manager of Yahel's packing house, which, among other things, is expected to process approximately 950 tons of melons, 1,500 tons of onions and 200 tons of peppers in this fiscal year.

"Unfortunately, agriculture in our day and age is not an economically sound industry. We earn enough money only to cover our expenses."

Water, or lack thereof, remains the chief stumbling block to further development. "We have a quota of 1.7 million cubic metres of water per year," said Tobias. "We should have 2.7 million cubic metres."

With access to more water, Yahel could conceivably increase its agricultural output and possibly achieve profitability.

Certainly, the quality of Yahel's water is infinitely better today than it was several years ago.

For the first few years of its existence, Yahel relied on water brought in by tanker trucks. Yahel's three wells were simply insufficient, while the quality of its brackish, iron-tinged water left much to be desired. Water filters have since been installed, but Yahel is essentially water-impoverished.

Yahel, too, is dogged by slow growth. The original plan called for 1,000 inhabitants, but Yahel has fallen far short of that mark. "We can't increase our population without increasing our means of production," Tobias observed. "We don't have enough income-producing outlets to support a bigger population."

Apart from its bountiful fields, Yahel depends on its dairy herd, fish ponds, educational programming and guided excursions in the Arava. Not all its members work on the kibbutz. Some, like Sperber, commute to jobs in the area.

Everyone agrees that life is hard in the Arava.

"I've changed my expectations along the way," said Sperber, the mother of three children. "I wasn't prepared for the difficulties, which have taken a tremendous toll on our community and its ability to attract more people. It's been a much more overwhelming harsh desert than I had expected. There have been times when people have packed up and left. But this has strengthened us."

The searingly hot summer weather, in which the temperature rarely falls below 40 degrees celsius, is a perennial source of discomfort. "There are days when you feel you've just walked into an oven," sighed Sperber.

"I'll give you an idea what it's like," Tobias added. "We built a swimming pool before a synagogue."

The isolation, the less than adequate bus service and the lack of cultural facilities also pose problems. There is a medical/dental clinic in Yahel, but the nearest hospital is in Eilat.

Despite these drawbacks and inconveniences, Tobias is satisfied with his life here. "Generally speaking, we're a very happy community," said Tobias, who went straight to Yahel from Ben-Gurion Airport upon making aliyah. "People get on well."

In memoriam...

Louis Nizer was a great American trial lawyer who was an authority on contract, copyright, libel, divorce and anti-trust law. His memoir, My life in Court, was a best-seller.

Arthur Krim, his partner, was an entertainment lawyer and trusted advisor to U.S. presidents. As head of Orion Pictures and United Artists, he produced about 1,000 movies (including Rocky and Annie Hall), and advised John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson and Jimmy Carter.

Canadian-born Harry Saltzman produced several James Bond films — among them Goldfinger, Dr. No, From Russia With Love and Thunderball.

Chaim Raphael wrote British crime novels under the pseudonym of Jocelyn Davey. His best-known books were The Naked Villainy, The Road From Babylon and Murder in Paradise.

Joe Kirby (Jacob Kurtzberg) was called the King of the Comics. Working for Marvel Comics, he helped create two vivid characters — Captain America and the Incredible Hulk.

Lawrence Spivak founded the enormously popular NBC-TV talk show, Meet the Press, which marks its 50th anniversary this year.

Aleksandr Chakovsky, one of the few high-ranking Jewish communists in the old Soviet Union, was editor of the influential Literary Gazette from 1962-1987 and a member of the ruling Central Committee.

Frederick Praeger founded two publishing houses, Praeger Press and Westview Press, which gave Western readers insights into communism and foreign affairs. His most memorable titles were One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich by Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn and The New Class by Milovan Djilas.

Josef Gingold was a distinguished U.S. violin teacher. Two of his pupils were Joshua Bell and Jaime Laredo.

Jon Kimche was a seasoned journalist who edited the London-based Jewish Observer and Middle East Review and the New Middle East.

Keith Joseph (Lord Joseph) was a Conservative party cabinet minister under British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, an architect of her free-market philosophy and a member of Parliament.

Milton Shapp, the governor of the state of Pennsylvania in the 1970s, was the first Jew to seek the Democratic party nomination for the U.S. presidency. He made his bid in 1976, but shortly afterward dropped out.

Shlomo Zabludowicz, a Polish Holocaust survivor who settled in Finland after the war, was an arms manufacturer. His company, Soltam, sold ammunition and small arms to Israel. In the late 1950s, he convinced Germany to buy Israeli-manufactured military equipment.

David Lyon , an advertising executive, directed the campaign that devised one of America's most durable images, the rugged cowboy — the Marlboro Man — who plugged an American cigarette brand.

Rabbinic Reflections

By RABBI LEIGH LERNER

The world is full of takers. That's an old truism, but the world is also full of people who refuse to take, and that's a sad fact. They're among those addressed by the opening verse of this week's Torah portion, Terumah.

Terumah is an offering made by free will, an offering of the heart, which the Israelites made for the sake of constructing the wilderness sanctuary. Yet the text calls upon Moses and his minions that they should "take [not give] for Me an offering."

Actually, terumah helps us learn that every gift requires taking, and often the taking itself is a gift. Many people, desiring to prove their self-sufficiency, refuse the support and sustenance of others, or refuse to let others bring them tokens of love, whether gifts of a material nature or simply gifts of the heart, like a visit or a hug. Yet such people often want to be the ones who bring gifts. They like to give. They don't like to receive.

So the Torah indicates that taking a free will offering is a gift in itself, allowing the giver to enjoy the good feelings that comes from beneficence. Those who find it hard to be "takers" ought to remember that in the taking, they allow pleasure to others.

Similarly, when we think about the Torah itself, reports the Vilna Gaon, we often view it as a gift. The festival of Shavuot, for example, is "Zeman Matan Toratenu," the time of the giving of the Torah. But the Book of Proverbs states, "I have given you a good doctrine," (using the Hebrew lekach, which has the same root as the verb, to take). That means the Torah is not just a gift, but also something to be taken.

We Jews are offered the gift of the Torah, but unless we take it, accept it and live it, the Torah remains a gift unreceived. We all recall how frustrating it is to offer a present, only to be refused by the person we're honoring. Imagine, then, how frustrating it must be to the Holy One of Israel to give us a Torah of truth, only to have us Jews walk away from it.

This parshah also hints at those who give without willing hearts. Since the terumah was taken, it is possible the givers' hearts were not inclined to the task, and the gifts taken against their will.

Rabbi Akiva Eger reminds us of the Talmudic verse, "The All Merciful requires the heart." When the Israelites of the Torah first heard of the terumah, they may not have been inclined to give. As the time approached to make their offering, they attuned their hearts to the task. When it comes time to give to a sacred cause, we have to move our hearts to do what is right. There should be no unwillingness in matters like terumah.

How wonderful it would be for those who collect tzedakah whether for Federation, synagogue, or other endeavors, if they viewed their taking of the donation as a gift to the donors, and if the donors simultaneously moved their hearts so all tzedakah would be offered ungrudgingly.

Rabbi Leigh Lerner is spiritual leader of Montreal's Temple Emanu-El-Beth Sholom.

Haredi Jews, archeologists clash at construction site

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Haredi Jews and archeologists have again locked horns, this time at an electric company construction site in Beersheba, which the haredim claim contains Jewish remains.

The conflict began when ruins of a Byzantine church were uncovered at the site where the company planned to build. Archeologists asked to excavate the area and then discovered the remains.

These were turned over to the Ministry of Religious Affairs at the direction of the attorney general. The head of the excavation site said no more human remains have since been found.

The excavations are continuing, as are haredi protests over what they claim is the desecration of Jewish graves.

This is the latest eruption of friction between the Antiquities Authority and Haredi Jews, who have clashed in the past over various sites in Israel.

The authority last week sent Knesset members copies of a report that said that several of the haredi neighborhoods in Jerusalem have been built on graves from the Second Temple period.

The Hebrew daily Ha'aretz said the document, Two or Three Things You Didn't Know About the Antiquities Authority, was sent in response to a series of critical articles that appeared in the haredi press recently.

Among other things, the report said that "during archeological excavations in Shuafat and Mazor, which were undertaken to build haredi neighborhoods, dozens of ancient graves were discovered, including those of Jews, and no one protested until it was reported in the press."

Antiquities Authority spokesperson Efrat Orbach said the authority had informed the haredim about the Jewish graves, but they did nothing in response.

A spokesman for the Athra Kadisha Society, which monitors sites for the haredi community, said in response that the authority's claims were empty accusations with no basis in fact.

"Maybe in Shuafat they found one grave, which they quickly destroyed so no one would know," the spokesperson told Ha'aretz.

Soviet family gets landed immigrant status

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A Jewish family from the former Soviet Union whose members said they faced certain death if deported have been granted landed immigrant status in Canada as political refugees.

"This ends four years of terrible suffering," said a happy Felix Gogniev, 56, who with his ex-wife, Dina Tsallaeva, and daughters Fatima, 27, and Zalina, 25, were ordered to leave Canada by May 26 of last year.

Zalina was to be deported even though she is married to Gera Roth, a Canadian citizen.

The only cloud remaining over the family is the absence of Tsallaeva's name on the official Immigration Department document, but Gogniev believes it was a clerical error.

The Gognievs have been given work permits effective immediately.

The relieved family came direct to Canada from North Ossetia on visitors' visas four years ago.

They had high praise for Jewish Immigrant Aid Society (JIAS) case worker Etya Kanyevsky, the JIAS officials who successfully appealed their deportation order, and for lawyer Christine Kurawata.

"If, in fact, we had been deported to North Ossetia we would now be just seven kilometres from the border of Chechnya and 70 kilometres from Grozny," Gogniev said.

In 1992, H.R. Hanson and W. Bauer, two former members of the Immigration and Refugee Board, ruled that the family had not proven its Jewish origins and, even if they were Jewish, might face discrimination in North Ossetia but not persecution. Their request for refugee status was denied.

Their case dragged through a hearing and an appeal at a time when the Immigration and Refugee Board was experiencing internal turmoil. Michael Schelew, the deputy chair, known as an advocate for refugees, resigned after some IRB members charged political interference. Schelew had asked some board members to justify their decisions against refugee applicants.

The Gogniev family maintained in evidence to the board that they were tortured and harassed because they were Jewish.

Felix Gogniev and his family.

They claim to be descendants of the Grigorin tribe which made its way to the mountains of Russia from the Middle East through Iran and Persia. Gogniev still does not have full use of one hand, and walks with a limp because of the torture.

"I'm not bitter about this, Canada is a wonderful country, and we look forward to beginning a new life," Gogniev said.

He has registered his job search with the Jewish Vocational Service. He has the equivalent of a PhD in economics from Russia and would be happy with a research or clerical post in business management or food processing.

While in Canada, he worked as a volunteer economics analyst for the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and as a volunteer cook at Yorkdale Secondary School.

Fatima has a part-time job as a dental assistant and Zalina works part time in an accounting office.

Domestic violence part of community

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Domestic violence is as prevalent in the Jewish community as it is in the general population, according to social workers from Jewish Family and Child Service (JF&CS).

The only difference is that in the Jewish community, although abuse is just as severe, there is a less frequent use of weapons, said Joan Hurley and Blanche Wiseman.

Hurley and Wiseman who run groups at JF&CS for abused women and for abusers, were part of Hadassah-WIZO's recent breakfast program on Domestic Violence: How Can we Break the Cycle?

The program launched the new Women for Women campaign aimed at raising awareness and providing support for hot lines, shelters, halfway houses and legal aid to women in crisis in both Israel and Canada.

Other speakers were Mary Lou Fassel, director of legal services at the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic; and Catherine Fox, public education coordinator at the Yellow Brick House, an emergency shelter for women and children.

Fox cited the statistics that in Canada, one out of five women is assaulted by a male partner and two or more are killed by their male partner each week.

"We have to accept that there is at least one abused woman in this room right now," she said.

Fox, who grew up in an abusive home, stressed that the victim is not the one to blame in an abusive relationship. "Being a victim is a learned behavior — children are trained to become victims.

"On an uplifting note, however, there is something we can do about it. When we go into schools we can talk about not giving up power. We are not talking about being powerful, but rather, being empowered. Fewer women would be abused if they felt good about themselves."

Fassel said the Barbra Schlifer Commemorative Clinic, named after a young lawyer who was murdered the night she was called to the bar, shows something good can come out of tragedy. "The clinic was developed by Barbra's friends and colleagues because we felt the need to have something of value come out of her death."

The free legal and counselling service for victims of violence has seen about 8,000 women since its inception in 1985.

"Eighty-five to 90 per cent of these women need legal assistance, and partner assault represents about 40 per cent of the legal work we do. This reflects the need for special legal services for women, as well as community and government support," Fassel said.

Toronto mayor, Barbara Hall, who went to law school with Barbra Schlifer, brought greetings from the municipal government and blamed the housing crisis for keeping many women in violent situations. She said it was because of that issue that she first got into municipal politics. "Women's safety should not be jeopardized because of a lack of housing."

Hurley and Wiseman see "women from every socio-economic group." They urged the women to take a brochure if they or anyone they know needs help.

As well as running a shelter with a kosher kitchen which can facilitate one or two families, JF&CS has a network of shelters where kosher food can be provided.

In Israel, Hadassah-WIZO provides services for battered women that include legal advice, a shelter, a halfway house project that provides temporary independent accomodations to the newly single parent ready to leave the shelter, a telephone hotline and self-help groups.

Lizzies look for veterans

TORONTO — The Lizzies are looking for a few good men.

To commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II and to honor the former members of the Elizabeth Playground sports teams who joined the Canadian armed forces, the Lizzies will publish a special commemorative book this May.

To facilitate preparation of the book and to make it a definitive edition, the Lizzies are asking veterans to contact them with as much information and as many mementoes as they can muster.

Lizzies' alumnus Harvey Bronstine estimates that more than 100 former Lizzies fit the bill. Anyone with information can contact Bronstine at 416-749-6735 or Norm Cornack at 416-749-6735.

The Lizzies will honor the veterans at their annual dinner this June.

Sexuality report draft comes under debate

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Rabbinical Assembly's controversial draft report on sexuality, first made public last year, was fodder for an animated debate at Beth Tzedec Congregation last Monday evening.

The debate between the report's author and a right-wing critic came one day before the eighth draft was unanimously accepted as an official document of the Conservative umbrella Rabbinical Assembly (RA) in New York.

Rabbi David Novak, 53, who left the organization to found the Union for Traditional Judaism, claims the document represents a "fundamental theological problem" in the Conservative movement.

A Rabbinic Letter on Intimate Relations puts forth a religious context for sexuality.

Speaking opposite report author Rabbi Elliot Dorff at the Issues & Insights series sponsored by the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Rabbi Novak took particular exception to the report's discussion of homosexuality and non-marital sex.

He likened it to a 1950 RA document granting Conservative Jews permission to drive to synagogue on Shabbat. "This is where the problem began in the Conservative movement," he said.

Beth Tzedec's Rabbi Baruch Frydman-Kohl acted as moderator before a mixed crowd of 250 people. All three rabbis are close friends.

According to Rabbi Novak, who

Rabbi David Novak

Rabbi Elliot Dorff

teaches Modern Judaic Studies at the University of Virginia, the document reflects "an unwillingness to clearly articulate what it is to live under the law of God. I hope many people in my former community, the Conservative movement, will express their disapproval."

"David, you're just wrong," said a genial Rabbi Dorff.

The report does not condone but rather addresses the issue of sex outside of marriage, the 51-year-old provost at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles stressed.

"Our choice was to say nothing or say something," he said. "Not saying anything [implies that] unless you're having sex within the bounds of marriage, then you do whatever you want."

The report discusses Jewish ethical values like honesty, fidelity, modesty, love and holiness within sex-related issues.

"If you're going to have sex [without marriage], these [ethical] obligations are still incumbent on you, maybe even more so, because you don't have marriage to impose them," said Rabbi Dorff.

"A document can always be misread," he said. "I hope this letter will be the vehicle by which we as a Jewish community confront these issues openly."

Bikur Cholim starts campaign

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canadian supporters of Jerusalem's Bikur Cholim Hospital are undertaking a $900,000 (US) fundraising campaign to expand the hospital's emergency department.

The Canadian Friends of Bikur Cholim, formed in 1979, may not be the newest kid on the fundraising block, but the expansion is its biggest single project to date.

The Jerusalem hospital, located since 1925 at the intersection of Jaffa and Strauss roads, treated over 22,000 emergency cases in 1993. The much-needed $1.5 million (US) expansion, to which British supporters have pledged $600,000, will be complete by early 1996.

The Canadian Friends of Bikur Cholim has traditionally raised funds through parlor meetings, art auctions and mailings within the Orthodox community. The group raised over $1.25 million between 1992 and 1994.

The current fundraising campaign will kick off with a March 22 forum on menopause. Public relations director Hindy Abelson said she expects 1,000 women of all ages will participate in the event, which promises to explore medical and alternative approaches to menopause.

"Bikur Cholim is a hospital with a heart," said Canadian Friends president and co-founder Leah Aryeh. Those treated at the hospital include wealthy Rechavia residents, Arabs from East Jerusalem and patients from the nearby Mea Shearim district.

The hospital's central location also makes it the closest treatment facility for those injured in car accidents and terror attacks such as last October's shooting spree on Ben Yehuda street.

Family support seen important for new baalei teshuvah

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Serious rifts in a family when one of its members becomes more religious are usually the result of a problem in the family — not in the religion, say two prominent psychologists.

Rabbi Michel and Faige Twerski are active in outreach to baalei teshuvah (those becoming religious). In the last of a weekend series of talks at Aish HaTorah, they told the standing-room only crowd that with understanding, consideration and support on all sides, the process can be a healthy and successful one.

We must consider what other family members might feel and think when a loved one becomes religious, Rabbi Twerski said.

Parents might see it as a rejection of their value system, or a rejection of themselves as good people, or an accusation that they aren't good people.

They might feel they are being replaced by new parent figures (such as a rabbi) and by a new community. They are concerned that the newly religious person doesn't attend family functions with the same spirit.

They might feel the child "is constantly making demands for us to change for him."

They might see religious observance as just another fad their youngsters are going through.

A spouse, on the other hand, may see it as an attempt at manipulation or domination, "an attempt to disparage in a way that permits no response."

Religious requirements

As the newly religious partner leaves for classes, prayers and new activities, the spouse may "feel as if there is no time for them."

Religious requirements, such as kashrut, impinge upon the spouse, and taharas hamishpachah (the laws of family purity) "seems to have intruded on the most private, intimate part of their life."

Both the parents and the spouse, Rabbi Twerski said, fear that the baal teshuvah loves something else (religion) more than he or she loves them.

The baalei teshuvah, in the meantime, are bewildered by what they see as obstinancy or a lack of understanding. "If they really loved me, they would make this accomodation," they may think.

They feel abandoned at a time when they need security and encouragement, the rabbi said.

Faige Twerski suggested that the baalei teshuvah probably feel very frustrated that, while they may be educated and functioning well in their professional lives, in the Torah world "they are suddenly at a very basic level."

In their frustration, she said, "they lash out at those closest to them, in ways that may not be appropriate."

Everybody involved in such a situation, the Twerskis said, must commit themselves to maintaining their relationship.

The baal teshuvah, Faige Twerski said, must reassure the parents or spouse that they are not being rejected, judged, or any less loved.

"We must explain that Judaism encourages and solidifies relationships. And that so much of what is in Torah is already in them, like kindness, respect, integrity.

"We must acknowledge, to ourselves and to our parents, that we are what we are because of them."

If the situation really reaches an impasse, Rabbi Twerski advised seeking outside resources, such as an outreach person, a rabbi, or other families who have been through the same thing.

Because the baal teshuvah is less knowledegable about religious observance, he may be more rigid. The outreach person, the rabbi said, can help deal with the family in ways that are comfortable rather than confrontational.

Most of all, the Twerskis said, the baal teshuvah should "try to do his or her own thing without making a big deal out of it."

"Don't yell at people to turn off the TV on Shabbes. Go to your room and observe Shabbes there," Rabbi Twerski said, while Faige Twerski warned, "Don't be G-d's policeman."

She also said that the baalei teshuvah can show good faith and commitment to maintaining good family relationships by compensating in other ways. For instance, she said, if a couple used to go out on Saturday, promise to go out on Sunday instead. If you used to call your parents once a week, call them three times.

Quilt commemorates end of war

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — A local artist is creating a quilt commemorating the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II and dedicating it to family members who perished in the Holocaust.

"Doing this has made me almost feel as if I knew these people," said Linda R. Goldman of her grandparents, three aunts, cousins and other relatives from her mother's side who died during the war.

The memorial quilt includes pre-war photographs of Goldman's grandparents and her three aunts. Her mother, Annette Goldman (formerly Diamond), smuggled the pictures into Auschwitz-Birkenau and kept them until she was liberated from Bergen-Belsen.

Goldman, 44, made a point of using photos of happy picnics and relaxed gatherings before the Holocaust. "I wanted to show happy things too," she said.

The photographs, which have been printed directly onto fabric, are surrounded by 12 Stars of David, four of them embroidered with the names of the dead. The pale yellow stars will be framed by squares of plain and patterned fabric symbolizing the four seasons and aspects of the Holocaust, like a pale blue square for the sky above the camps that inmates looked to when they cried to God and asked "Why me?," Goldman said.

Goldman's Spadina Avenue street scene hangs at Baycrest Centre.

A brown square represents the earth Jews shovelled when they dug their own graves, while striped fabric is for the inmates' uniforms. Green is for the forests where many Jews fled during the war.

Goldman's inspiration came from a painting shown in The Canadian Jewish News last fall of Jews in Belarus forced to strip and dig their own graves before being shot. She wept when she saw the picture, she recalled. "It was very upsetting."

The quilt, which Goldman estimates will be 5 ft. by 5 ft., will be complete by early spring. Until then, the artist — who is head of the graphics department of the Toronto Public Libraries — will be spending much of her time working on it.

A graduate of the Central Technical School's art program, Goldman began making quilts and applique wall hangings in the '70s.

A 1975 write-up in Toronto Life magazine brought Goldman her first commission — from Moses Znaimer. Now Goldman's work is in private collections in Canada, the United States and Europe.

One of her most-loved pieces, a bright Spadina Avenue street scene, hangs at Baycrest, where one resident told Goldman's mother how much it cheers her up.

"As an artist I've always wanted my work to give people pleasure and hearing this comment made my day," said Goldman.

BBW/C chapter uses tabs to purchase wheelchair

TORONTO — Sha'aron Chapter of B'nai Brith Women of Canada (BBW/C) recently presented a wheelchair to the stroke recovery group of the Bathurst Jewish Centre.

The wheelchair was purchased through the collection and sale of approximately two million pop can tabs.

One group that has taken up the cause is Students Assisting the Disabled is Essential (SADE), a Thornhill Secondary School group started by Jordan Zwicker.

This is the fourth year of project and to date, seven wheelchairs have been purchased. Previous wheelchairs have been donated to Zareinu, Group Visions, the Children's Aid Society and Lincoln Place.

The Bathurst Jewish Centre wheelchair was presented to stroke recovery group president Irene Lastman by Sha'aron chapter president Sandi Ben-David and project chair Evelyn Brager.

To join the project, call Brager at 416-449-2642 or the BBW/C office at 416-630-9313.

The decision is personal. . .

Synagogue affiliation, plot registration and cemetery management in no way limit the freedom to call any particular funeral home, despite reports of misinformation to the contrary. As everyone should know, the decision regarding burial arrangements belongs exclusively and appropriately to the bereaved family, and to no one outside it.

The choice is obvious.

Within the narrow choice there's a clear and indisputable difference. Every senior director at Benjamin's has a wide advantage in years of experience and training. The ability to explain Jewish laws and traditions in depth, the network of professional relationships to count on in unexpected or personal situations and the supervision over sensitive details continuously justify the high regard for Benjamin's as an institution in this community.

By taking their own decisions in hand, and calling upon Benjamin's, families are indicating an uncompromising degree of quality-consciousness for themselves and the memory of a loved one.

Draimin re-elected as the president of Pardes Shalom

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

Bill Draimin

TORONTO — Lawyer Bill Draimin's office is filled with the usual law books, diplomas and family pictures, but with one difference: the framed painting of a serious-faced boy dressed in Victorian short pants.

That boy is Draimin's great-uncle Samuel King, born in 1867 and one of the first Jewish lawyers in Ontario.

Bill Draimin is proud of his family, which came to Canada in the 1860s and 1870s, not just because of their deep Canadian roots but also for their long tradition of serving the local and Jewish communities.

Draimin is following that tradition. Last Sunday he began his fourth term as president of Toronto Hebrew Memorial Park, Pardes Shalom cemetery, in Vaughan.

Draimin is a member of the Reform chevra kadisha. He call that and his work at Pardes Shalom, which Toronto's Holy Blossom Temple helped purchase in the early 1970s, "the most fulfilling work," citing the traditional view that it is the greatest mitzvah because one is offering a service to those who can't offer thanks.

The 89-acre cemetery, under executive director Ben Schneider, now has 48 organizations representing the secular, Reform, Conservative, Orthodox and benevolent society worlds.

While the cemetery is one of the largest in the country, the search for new land is constant. "Cemeteries think in terms of 50 to 75 years ahead," Draimin said. He says Pardes Shalom will be fully allocated by the year 2030.

One of the most important issues the cemetery will have to face in the next five years, he says, is the burial of non-Jewish spouses. The cemetery bylaws state only members of the Jewish faith may be buried there.

Breast cancer rate higher in Ontario

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Women must not be lulled into complacency about breast cancer, a physician said at a recent forum.

"The reason we are here is that breast cancer is the most common cancer and the leading cause of premature death among Ontario women. Ontario has one of the highest breast cancer rates in Canada and Canada has one of the highest rates in the world," said breast cancer specialist, Dr. Judith Weinroth.

The forum, sponsored by Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Sisterhood also included Carry Greenberg, a researcher in diet and breast cancer prevention and Sharon Hampson, breast cancer survivor.

Weinroth, medical coordinator, Ontario Breast Screening Program, Toronto Centre, said that breast cancer is a topic many people are afraid to discuss.

"It is important however, to talk about it," she said. "In 1993, there were 6,200 cases in Ontario and in 1994, 6,500 cases. Over 2,000 women die annually from breast cancer in Ontario alone.

"Although there is no proven method of preventing breast cancer, it is possible to reduce deaths by 30 to 40 per cent by finding the disease early and treating it properly. Breast cancer is not a death sentence. Early detection can save 300 to 400 lives a year in Ontario."

Weinroth told the capacity crowd that the Ontario Breast Screening Program, funded by the Ministry of Health, is a program of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation and is administered through regional cancer centres and Princess Margaret Hospital. It offers women 50 years and older mammography, physical examination of the breasts, information on breast self-examination and a reminder to return for screening. Its unique features are that a doctor's referral is unnecessary and that patients receive their own results.

Greenberg, currently working on the Diet and Breast Cancer Prevention study, the only study of its kind in the world, said there is a clear relationship between what we eat and the risk of getting breast cancer, but it is a complicated relationship — one aspect of a diet does not make a difference.

"In Japan, where there is lower fat consumption, the incidence of breast cancer is lower," she said. "It is clear, however, that it is not one dietary component but what a person eats in total that matters."

Judo experts keep opponents on the mats

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Three years ago, Masha Kazakevich was feeling resentful of the fact that as a woman alone, she worried about being attacked on the street.

So, she took matters into her own hands and signed up for judo lessons at a neighborhood martial arts club.

Almost immediately her natural abilities began to bear fruit — in competitions if not on the street.

In each of the last three years, the 19-year-old Kazakevich has slammed, stunned and generally overwhelmed her opposition in competitions. Recently she took home her third consecutive Ontario Open Championship in judo.

A green belt in the 56 kg class, Kazakevich has taken on brown and black belts and beaten them handily, sometimes in matches that last as little as 10 seconds.

Her coach and Samurai Club operator Moni Aizik says Kazakevich "is good at ground fighting, bringing [her opponents] to the ground and making them submit with a choke or an arm lock.

"She can take on the strongest guy and bring them to the ground," when training at the club.

Aizik said Kazakevich's strengths are her speed, her flying arm lock and her keen appreciation of judo's technical aspects. "She tries to understand the details. She's a perfectionist."

Kazakevich trains five times a week for up to three hours at a time. She also trains in Israeli army "survival" techniques in which anything goes.

"I think the best way to win is as fast and clean as possible," she said. "If you get them in an arm lock or a choke, they have to give up immediately."

A native of Grodno, Belarus, Kazakevich and her family immigrated to Canada via Italy about 10 years ago. While her father has been supportive of her interest in martial arts, her mother was worried about the physical aspects. Those concerns were amplified when Kazakevich once broke some bones in her wrist, but she shrugs that off. "You have to learn to take a certain amount of pain."

Kazakevich looks to Israeli Yael Arad, an Olympic silver medalist in judo, as an inspiration. "I like to see a strong Jewish people to break the stereotype," she said. "It's a strong nation all over, not just physically."

* * *

Unlike Kazakevich, Igor Korol was an accomplished judo fighter when he immigrated to Canada from Riga almost five years ago.

Masha Kazakevich gets ready to slam Igor Korol to the mat in this made for CJN picture.

He began learning the sport at age 12, moving to judo from the less rugged game of chess because, the 24-year-old asserts, chess and judo have a lot in common since both require strategy.

Back in the U.S.S.R., Korol, then 19, won a junior championship on behalf of his Dynamo club.

He took first place in the under 65 kg category for black belts at last month's Ontario Open Judo Championship.

"He's very gifted physically," Aizik said. "He's very strong, very agile and experienced."

An instructor at the Samurai Club, Korol is setting his sights on the Canadian championships in May, as is Kazakevich.

He won a bronze medal at the 1993 Maccabiah Games in Israel. Ultimately, Korol would like to represent Canada at the 1996 Olympics. "Everything is possible," he believes.

Esther Gold meets children attending a nursery funded by UJA in Kfar Gvirol.

UJA's Project Renewal helps fund centre in Israel

TORONTO — Israel's only school inside a community centre is being built in Kfar Gvirol.

Kfar Gvirol, about 20 km outside of Tel Aviv, is one of three municipalities adopted by United Jewish Appeal (UJA) in Toronto under a program called Project Renewal.

Twenty-two classrooms for children from kindergarten to Grade 6 will be placed inside a building used by the entire community. The library, educational workrooms and craft rooms will be shared by students and Kfar Gvirol residents.

"The relationship between the school and the community centre is still being worked out," said Project Renewal committee member Esther Gold, a professional educator who recently returned from planning sessions in Kfar Gvirol. "There will definitely be joint programs."

UJA, which funded the town's existing community centre, is contributing $600,000 towards the new facility's $3 million cost and $400,000 for operational expenses.

Although Kfar Gvirol will soon have two community centres, the school inside the new building will be a first. Children are now bused to their classes outside town.

The unique community centre concept is well suited to Israel's school hours, said Project Renewal co-chair, Bill Kassel.

"The school day only goes until 2 p.m.; so even when school is out, the building will be in use all the time," he said.

Kassel said the new facility will ease overcrowding at the old centre, which will be able to keep children busy after school until their parents pick them up.

Construction on the second community centre is expected to start this summer.

Brain alterations focus of study

TORONTO — Baycrest's Rotman Research Institute is studying brain alterations in people who are aging normally.

Institute director Dr. Donald Stuss said the difficulties faced by stroke-free older men and women sometimes mimic those who have brain damage caused by stroke.

The healthy elderly, he observed, may experience problems with memory organization.

"Some of the models of normal aging indicate that memory dysfunction may be the result of brain changes," he said.

However, the normally aged can take advantage of memory improvement methods more quickly and effectively than those who have experienced strokes.

Understanding what happens to the brain during aging is one of the institute's highest priorities.

The institute is also placing high priority on research into dementia, the all-encompassing term for general brain deterioration. Alzheimer's disease is one form of dementia, but there are many more, which, Stuss cautioned, are sometimes improperly diagnosed as Alzheimer's.

Although scientists have so far failed to discover a cause or a cure for Alzheimer's disease, they are learning a lot about the minds of Alzheimer's patients.

In addition to directing the Rotman Research Institute, Stuss is vice-president of research at the Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care and president of the 3,000-member International Neuropsychological Society.

He heads a team of world respected brain research scientists at Baycrest, who will play a major role at the new 372 bed Jewish Home for the Aged.

The new JHA will include a Centre for Cognitive Disorders which will work closely with the institute.

Holocaust education offered in schools

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Auschwitz-Birkenau survivor Judith Rubinstein has been telling junior and senior school students about her wartime experiences for the past six years because she fears history could repeat itself.

One of 50 survivors who addresses students visiting the Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre (HEMC), the 74-year-old Rubinstein tells them that tolerance is the magic word "or else [you] can get into trouble."

Last school year 16,000 students from the Greater Metropolitan Toronto area toured the centre and heard survivors speak. They include students from exclusive private schools, public schools with a high percentage of Jewish students and students from Catholic schools.

"We use the historical period of the Holocaust as an example of what prejudice and racism can lead to if it's not stopped," said director Pnina Zilberman.

Chair Anita Ekstein talks to students about her experiences as a hidden child in Poland because of her belief that racism is "rearing its head. I think we get through to them," she said, citing letters sent to speakers by young people moved by their lectures.

The HEMC visits are just one facet of Holocaust education programs offered in area schools. In North York, a program has been offered since 1987 when Board of Education trustee Elsa Chandler and Carl Hogg, the curriculum coordinator for middle and secondary schools, published subject material for English and history classes.

The teaching unit includes chapters on taking a stand against evil, human behavior, victims, resistance, responsibility and survivors. It is taught at all 20 North York high schools during Holocaust Remembrance Week in November, when students work on related projects.

Taking stand against evil

The Holocaust, Hogg said, is also taught in Grade 10 history, a required course for Ontario students.

Cheryl Rosenthal, a teacher at Newtonbrook Secondary School in North York, took a multicultural group of 30 students to the Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C., during Holocaust Education Week last fall. The students, mainly from Grade 10 and OAC, couldn't have cared less about American history, said Rosenthal, but there was not "one reaction like that from the Holocaust museum."

Students who take Mike Bernstein's course on the Jewish experience at Thornlea Secondary School in York Region study the Holocaust intensively for one week and visit the HEMC. "Even our own kids tend not to realize the extent of the persecution and suffering Jews underwent in the Holocaust," he said.

After looking at the events, his classes — students from Grade 10 through to OAC — discuss questions that are hard to answer, such as why did God let it happen, and talk about the lessons that can be learned from the Holocaust.

The Holocaust is covered in other courses at Thornlea.

Canada's complicity examined

At Upper Canada College (UCC), the Holocaust is taught in Ministry of Education-approved history and world politics courses in grades 9, 11 and 12. It is covered in the context of World War II, with attention paid to Canada's complicity.

Michael Eben, who teaches an OAC-level German literature and language course at UCC, devotes about 20 per cent of class time to studying the Holocaust through poetry, short stories and film. He takes his students to the HEMC.

When his students watch Night of the Fog, a Holocaust documentary Eben describes as "blunt and hard," he says they are taken aback because few have seen or heard anything about the Holocaust.

At Jewish schools like United Synagogue Day Schools (USDS), survivors are invited to speak to students as young as Grade 4. They can be surprised at the thoughtfulness of the questions, said Judaic studies program director Laura Wiseman. "Some of them will be about basic logistics, other children ask more philosophical questions," she said.

Survivors, often the relatives of students, speak to grades 4 and 5 each spring around Yom Hashoah. At that time of year, teachers may take their classes to the HEMC or the Beth Tzedec museum. USDS has a Yom Hashoah commemoration at the school.

Grade 8 USDS students study the Holocaust as part of the Jewish history curriculum, and stage a special event in conjuction with Holocaust Education Week. This year the students watched the play Lisa based on the Carol Matas novel about the Danish resistance.

Uri Korin, the principal of the Bialik Hebrew Day School, said to help make Holocaust education more meaningful to students, the school is setting up a living museum of the Holocaust with a kibbutz in northern Israel.

Hockey tourney planned

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — A regional hockey tournament for 8- to 12- year olds will be held at a Dundas, Ont. arena on April 2.

Participants will come from Hamilton, Cambridge, Kitchener-Waterloo, Guelph, Mississauga, St. Catherines and Brantford. The tournament will be followed by a social at the Hamilton Jewish Community Centre (JCC).

In organizing the tournament, Dr. Leslie Berman, past chair of the Hamilton-Wentworth and Area JCC youth committee, spent four months talking to youth leaders from neighboring Jewish communities and discovered "how some of [the youth groups] are really languishing," he told a recent meeting of the JCC community planning and priorities committee.

"The future of all our Jewish communities ... depends on our children," he said.

Berman believes that Jewish children must be given opportunities to meet socially and for recreational programs. If they play together, "hopefully, they will remain together and Jewish continuity will take care of itself."

Berman, who has an 8-year-old and a 12-year-old, said he is concerned not only about the lack of intercommunity programming, but also about the fact that there is little contact between local teen youth groups.

He said it is of utmost importance to establish an area-wide youth committee in which all youth groups can work together.

He feels that the federation and the JCC must network with local leaders and those in the surrounding communities to provide programs, especially for younger children.

Berman hopes the hockey tournament, which is sponsored by his clinic, will be the first in a series of youth activities that will keep Jewish youngsters together.

There is also a registration fee of $15.

U.S. official threatens aid to Egypt

Wants hostility towards Israel to end

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

WASHINGTON — A senior member of Congress has threatened to cut off all foreign aid to Egypt unless President Hosni Mubarak warms up to Israel and ends contact with Libya.

"I will lead the fight to terminate aid to Egypt if Mubarak continues the process of flirtation with [Libyan strongman Muammar] Khadafi and if his increasingly hostile statements to Israel don't come to an end," said Representative Tom Lantos (D — Calif.) at a gathering of the American Jewish Committee's national leadership last week.

Lantos, a longtime Israel supporter and a staunch advocate of aid to Israel and Egypt in the past, expressed similar sentiments to Secretary of State Warren Christopher at a hearing of the House International Relations Committee.

"The good will and financial support of the American Congress is directly related to the attitude Egypt takes both with respect to the peace process and with respect to terrorism," Lantos said at the hearing.

Only Israel receives more

Egypt has received an annual $2.1 billion in U.S. foreign aid since signing the Camp David accords in 1978. Only Israel receives more U.S. aid with $3 billion annually.

Israeli officials have expressed increasing alarm at hostile statements emanating from Cairo. Egypt has reportedly encouraged Arab countries to slow down their efforts to initiate ties with Israel until a deal with Syria is signed.

Egypt has also been pushing Israel to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, which comes up for renewal this year.

Christopher responded to Lantos' remarks by saying that Mubarak, while he "deserves great credit for leadership in the Middle East peace process, ... we simply don't understand [the Egyptians'] relationships with Khadafi, and we have simply indicated that we think those are ill-advised.;;

Lantos also told American Jewish Committee leaders that he would like to cut aid to Russia and end trading privileges extended to China if both countries continue to assist Iran in developing nuclear reactors.

Horrors of Auschwitz recalled 50 years later

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

OSWIECIM, Poland — Several hundred Auschwitz survivors and others held a Jewish memorial ceremony here last Thursday to mark the 50th anniversary of the liberation of the death camp.

Jewish groups organized the ceremony outside the framework of official ceremonies planned by the Polish government Thursday and Friday. Members of the Jewish groups said the official program did not reflect the unique dimension of Jewish suffering at Auschwitz.

About 300 Jews, many of them elderly, marched from the entrance of the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp, along the rail track that brought Jews here from across Europe, to the ruins of the camp crematoria.

There they prayed and wept, chanting K'el Maleh Rachamim, Yizkor and Kaddish.

In English, Hebrew, Yiddish and Polish, survivors, Israeli representatives and other Jewish leaders commemorated the dead and declared the Holocaust must not be forgotten.

"We know that God is merciful, but please, God, do not have mercy on those who created this place," said Elie Wiesel, Auschwitz survivor and Nobel Peace Prize winner.

"Those who have been here," he said, "remember the nocturnal processions of children and more children and more children — frightened, quiet, so quiet and so beautiful.

Highly critical

"If we could simply look at one, our heart would break. Did it not break the heart of the murderers? God, merciful God, do not have mercy on those who had no mercy on Jewish children," Wiesel said.

Wiesel headed the official U.S. delegation to the commemoration.

Jean Kahn, president of the European Jewish Congress, warned against the distortion of memory about the Holocaust.

He was highly critical of the way the Polish government organized the official ceremonies, and accused it of wanting to stage "a nationalist celebration by concealing the Jewish dimension of the Shoah."

One of the few non-Jewish representatives attending the Jewish ceremony was German president Roman Herzog.

Most of the participants appeared to be Polish Jews, but Jewish representatives also came from Hungary, Germany, the Czech Republic, Russia and elsewhere.

Other speakers included Knesset Speaker Shevach Weiss; Federation of Polish Jews president Kalman Sultanik and Menashe Lorenzy, chair of the Auschwitz Twins Association.

A Gypsy representative also spoke.

Official ceremonies last Thursday included a meeting of Nobel Peace Prize winners to draw up an appeal against intolerance.

Settlers stake claims to land

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — One day after a ministerial committee authorized continued, but slower, building in the communities surrounding Jerusalem, Jewish settlers took to the hills to stake their claim to lands they said were slated for development.

Residents from Ma'aleh Amos, located in the Gush Etzion bloc of settlements south of Jerusalem, set up caravans last Thursday on three hilltops in the area, saying they intended to build at the site.

Bedouins from the nearby village of Kissan protested the move. The Civil Administration ordered the caravans taken down at two of the hilltops, saying they lay outside the settlement's development plans.

The Civil Administration was reviewing the third site, apparently within the settlement's development boundaries.

Earlier that day, residents from Kochav Ya'acov, near the West Bank town of Ramallah, moved tractors to an undeveloped plot of land before the Civil Administration ordered the work halted.

Residents and members of the Council of Jewish Communities in Judea, Samaria and Gaza said the land is part of the settlement.

Kochav Ya'acov resident Elhanan Rappoport told Israel Radio "we want to remove any doubts over ownership."

Last week the ministerial committee on building in the territories authorized the completion or construction of some 4,000 privately financed apartments in Jerusalem's so-called satellite communities. This included retroactive approval of apartments that had already been sold.

The committee approved the sale of 800 apartments in Ma'aleh Adumim, as well as the gradual building of 1,000 additional apartments over the course of the next two years.

The ministers approved the completion of 1,000 apartments in Betar, as well as a plan to build 900 more.

The committee also authorized the completion of 340 apartments in Givat Ze'ev, and the planning for 800 more units, all to be located on private lands within the settlement's existing boundaries.

Settlement leaders at first criticized the ministerial committee's decision, saying it was misleading the public by authorizing apartments which had already been approved.

But leaders of the communities surrounding Jerusalem later met with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and emerged saying they were satisfied.

In the words of Ma'aleh Adumim Mayor Benny Kashriel, "We got what we wanted."

The Palestinian Authority warned that any continued building violates the Palestinian self-rule accord and could lead to further unrest and demonstrations.

The Associated Press quoted PLO chief Yasser Arafat as suggesting the decision violated a promise "that they would not expand settlements or increase their numbers."

Peace Now also came out against the committee's decision.

'Sexist' comments cause outrage

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

TEL AVIV — Two high-ranking military men took a small break from the ongoing security debate last week to let Israeli women know what they think of them.

"Women have always been whores just as men have always been soldiers," said Col. Gershon Hacohen, commander of the 7th Armored Brigade, to a class of Jerusalem high school students about to be drafted into the Israel Defence Forces (IDF).

The comment was made public on the same day that deputy Defence Minister Mordechai Gur told acting Knesset Speaker Esther Salmovitz her behavior during a stormy Knesset session had been "whorish."

Isolated outbursts?

Israeli women don't think so.

"It is no coincidence that both these people are products of the army," said Likud MK Limor Livnat. She, along with women MKs of all political parties, is demanding that Hacohen be dismissed from the army and that Gur — who has refused to apologize for his remark — be reprimanded by the Knesset ethics committee.

Hacohen — described by colleagues as a brilliant officer — also told students "most girls in the army could be replaced by computers and answering machines." After a public outcry, he apologized for his comments and was reprimanded by the army.

But his remarks will not be so easily forgotten. They exposed too many raw nerves in the army, and possibly in Israeli society as a whole.

"Sexual harassment is rampant in the army," says history teacher Batya Fogel, recalling examples from her own stint as an officer. "Col. Hacohen's attitude is not unusual."

Neither is Batya Fogel's experience. It is difficult to find an Israeli woman who does not have tales to tell about sexual harassment in the army.

"My desk is full of complaints against high-ranking officers," says Nava Arad, the prime minister's advisor on the status of women. "Unfortunately, the colonel's remarks reflect the views of many in the army."

Hacohen's comments unleashed a storm over other sensitive issues. How important is the work done by women in uniform? And what does the army experience teach young women about their role in Israeli society?

"In the army, girls learn that they are meant to serve boys," says writer Gail Hareven. "The cruder boys expect sexual favors. The more refined ones expect other services. Girls are supposed to bring coffee, answer the phone and type letters, while boys train to become warriors."

Women in the IDF do serve as medics, tank instructors, and intelligence officers. But they are a minority. Most women do clerical work of one kind or another. "Talented, ambitious girls join the 'people's army' and learn to lower their self esteem to the level of a typewriter," Hareven writes.

These are the kind of wounds the colonel reopened with his remarks, and the main reason why so many women — and men — are calling for his dismissal.

"He has made many girls question whether they should serve in the army at all, and in that respect, he has done irreparable damage to the IDF," says economist Alex Fogel.

"Someone with such views isn't fit to command soldiers," says Col. (res.) Oren Sagiv of Kiryat Ono, who has two daughters in the army.

"What kind of lesson will this be to officers charged with sexual harassment?" asks Arad. "We have to show them that saying they're sorry is not enough."

Hareven says Hacohen is just a symptom. The real problem, she says, is that the army is built on the foundations of sexism.

By firing Hacohen, the IDF could show that maybe she is wrong.

The Week in Israel

Jan. 23:

• The soldiers killed at the Beit Lid junction were buried.

• Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin addressed the nation reaffirming that his government will continue the struggle to achieve peace and to fight the enemies of Israel. He also stated the path to peace must lead to a separation between Israelis and Palestinians, but not according to the pre-1967 borders. Jerusalem will remain united forever, he said.

• A state commission of inquiry was formed to investigate Yemenite children missing since the early 1950s.

Jan. 24:

• Rabin established a special committee to develop plans for separation between Israel and the Palestinian population in the West Bank.

• The Israel Defence Force (IDF) killed six Hezbollah fighters during clashes in Southern Lebanon; two IDF soldiers were wounded, one critically. One IDF soldier was accidentally killed in the engagement.

• The government survived a no confidence vote in the Knesset, 61-53. The vote centred on the issue of settlements near Jerusalem.

Jan. 25:

• An IDF spokesman said Hezbollah had gained control over the villages in south Lebanon.

• Israeli government officials announced that U.S. vice-president Al Gore will visit Israel in the first half of March.

• The Israeli Embassy in Tokyo protested to the management of the monthly magazine Marco Polo for publishing a 10-page article denying the Holocaust.

Jan. 26:

• Informed sources in the IDF's Northern Command have alerted the public to expect intensified efforts by Hezbollah to strike at IDF security patrols in Southern Lebanon.

• The IDF announced that one of its officers will be disciplined for his remarks concerning women in the army. (See article on this page.)

Jan. 27:

• According to a public opinion poll conducted by the newly-opened Palestinian Centre for Public Research in Beit Sachor near Bethlehem, more than half of the people in the West Bank approved of the Beit Lid bombings. Fewer than a third were opposed.

FREIGHT CAR OF DEATH

One of the freight cars that took Jews to their deaths at Auschwitz concentration camp during the Holocaust is to become a permanent memorial to the millions who were exterminated at the camp. The freight car memorial is at Jerusalem's Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial and Museum. The car was donated to Yad Vashem a few years ago by the Polish government and it was decided to incorporate it into a permanent memorial, designed by Moshe Safdie. [Isranet photo]

New markers, plaques installed at Birkenau

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

OSWIECIM, Poland — The Auschwitz Museum is installing a new system of plaques and markers at Birkenau in an effort to make the tragedy of the concentration camp more accessible to visitors.

The new system is designed both to provide detailed information about the death camp and to commemorate its victims.

Birkenau, also known as Auschwitz II, was the vast death camp two miles from the main Auschwitz camp. Jews across Europe were brought to Birkenau by rail in crowded cattle cars. From there, selections were made regarding who should go immediately to the gas chambers and who should be put to forced labor.

Most of the Auschwitz murders occurred at Birkenau.

The liberation of the Auschwitz concentration camp complex, where the Nazis slaughtered between 1.1 million and 1.5 million people between 1940 and 1945, was the focus of commemorations held last week.

Since the fall of Poland's Communist regime five years ago, numerous changes have been implemented at Auschwitz-Birkenau in order to correct Communist-era disinformation, which had minimized the overwhelming Jewish character of Auschwitz victims.

The Birkenau camp encompasses some 350 acres. Unlike Auschwitz I, whose buildings were turned into exhibition halls for a memorial museum, Birkenau was left as it was when the Nazis fled in 1945.

Before fleeing, the Nazis blew up the crematoria and destroyed or partially destroyed almost all other buildings on the site.

Aside from ruins and barbed wire, Birkenau today consists of its main entry building, the rail line, a few structures and guard towers, and scores of skeletal chimneys marking the sites of destroyed barracks.

The new information markers at Birkenau consist of slabs of black granite in the size and shape of tombstones. They are set up in groups at numerous sites around the former camp.

Some of the markers are already in place, while others are still being prepared. Some will bear informational texts in several languages describing given places. Others will bear maps and plans of the camp and its buildings. Still others will bear etched photographs showing how Birkenau looked during its operation and at its liberation.

Other markers, in Polish, English, Hebrew and Yiddish, will mark places where human ashes still lie.

Survey shows Poles want memory of Holocaust kept alive

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — The vast majority of Poles favor keeping the memory of the Holocaust alive, but they focus on their own suffering under the Nazis as much as on that of the Jews.

This was one of the findings of a new survey by the American Jewish Committee (AJC) released last week to coincide with the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz.

The survey also found that fewer Poles than four years ago hold opinions generally considered anti-Semitic.

Only 16 per cent of Poles believe Jews have too great an influence in society, down from 26 per cent in a 1991 AJC survey.

There was a similar decline in the number of Poles who would prefer not to have Jewish neighbors and who think that Jews behave in a way that provokes hostility.

For all these questions, Jews received some of the lowest negative ratings, as compared with other groups such as Gypsies, Ukrainians, Arabs, Romanians, businessmen and the Catholic Church.

At the same time, just under half of those surveyed said anti-Semitism is "somewhat of a problem" in Poland today. The rest were almost equally divided between considering anti-Semitism a "very serious problem" or "not a problem at all."

The survey was conducted for AJC by the Warsaw-based Demoskop polling agency in late December and early January. Face-to-face interviews were conducted with 1,145 respondents. The margin of error is three percentage points.

Of those surveyed, 85 per cent agreed with the statement, "We should keep the remembrance of the extermination of the Jews strong even after the passage of time."

Only 10 per cent agreed with the statement, "Fifty years after the end of World War II, it is time to put the memory of the Nazi extermination of the Jews behind us."

Asked whether Poles or Jews had suffered more from Nazi persecution, 40 per cent volunteered that both groups had suffered the same.

Strong majorities said many Poles rescued Jews during the Holocaust, few participated in the persecution of Jews, and Poles generally did enough, or as much as they could, to help Jews.

The survey also revealed a greater knowledge about the Holocaust than did a similar survey in the United States last year.

But while nine out of 10 Poles were able to identify Auschwitz, Dachau and Treblinka as concentration camps, they were far less accurate when it came to knowing the number of Jewish victims.

Only 34 per cent of the Poles selected six million as the approximate number of Jews killed by the Nazis. In this multiple-choice question, 38 per cent chose numbers ranging from 25,000 to two million. This is similar to the results of an AJC poll of Germans last year.

The survey released this week brought together two streams of research that AJC has been conducting in various countries over the past several years — one relating to knowledge and remembrance of the Holocaust, the second focusing on attitudes toward Jews and other minorities.

Beit Lid bomber had been freed from Israeli prison

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — One of the terrorists involved in the Jan. 22 suicide bombing at Beit Lid Junction had been freed from an Israeli prison as part of a prisoner-release arrangement with the Palestinian Authority, Israel Radio reported last week.

The report prompted Likud Knesset member Tzachi Hanegbi to submit a bill that would prevent Israeli authorities from releasing Palestinian prisoners who had committed murder.

Hanegbi also called for the dismantling of the recently appointed ministerial committee that oversees prisoner releases.

Justice Minister David Libai, who responded for the government during the Knesset debate, said the committee had suspended its activities since the attack.

He also said that criteria governing future releases of Palestinian prisoners have not yet been established and that guidelines should be determined by the government and the president without legislative constraints.

The Knesset rejected Hanegbi's bill last Wednesday.

Committee delays decision on Jewish Agency head

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — A key committee of Diaspora philanthropists has postponed its decision on the suitability of the two leading candidates to head the Jewish Agency for Israel and the World Zionist Organization (WZO).

Sources said the committee deferred its decision at the request of Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

The 10-member committee is to vet potential candidates for the chairmanship of the executive of the Jewish Agency and WZO.

The actual appointment will be made in February by the WZO, which usually elects the candidate nominated by the Israeli Labor Party.

The prime minister has been a staunch supporter of Yehiel Leket, the agency's acting chair, in the face of opposition from some Diaspora fundraisers.

The 10-member "advice and consent" committee of the Jewish Agency interviewed Leket and the other candidate, Labor MK Avraham Burg, at a Manhattan hotel last Tuesday.

Members reportedly suggested splitting the position to make Burg chair and Leket chair of operations. Leket was said to have rejected the proposal.

The race between Leket and Burg comes at a defining juncture for the Jewish Agency and WZO.

The WZO, founded to establish a Jewish state, approaches its centennial with its continued existence in question. Few members of the younger generations in either Israel or the Diaspora have been attracted to an international Jewish organization predicated on political Zionism and divided along Israeli party lines.

At the same time, the Jewish Agency, having resettled more than 500,000 Jews from the former Soviet Union in the past few years, faces the prospect of continuing cuts in its $500-million budget.

The agency is largely funded by American federations, which have increasingly been keeping more of the money raised for local programs.

And continuing to hang over the agency is the specter of corruption and mismanagement left by former chair Simcha Dinitz.

Dinitz was indicted last year for aggravated fraud and abuse of public trust related to the alleged abuse of Jewish Agency credit cards. After taking a leave of absence, he formally stepped down at the end of December and is now on trial in Jerusalem.

The 53-year-old Leket, a longtime Jewish Agency-WZO official, is widely credited for restoring the organization's morale and for correcting abuses during his 11-month tenure as acting chair.

But his quest to succeed Dinitz has been consistently opposed by some leading Diaspora philanthropists, foremost among them South African industrialist Mendel Kaplan.

CELEBRATING THE MEMORY OF THE BABA SALI

An elderly Moroccan woman lights a candle at the tomb of Rabbi Israel Abuhatzeira, the "Baba Sali." This year marked the 11th anniversary of the death of the venerated Moroccan rabbi. Each year, a growing number of people, not exclusively Moroccan, attend the "Hilulah" or celebration in his memory in the Negev city of Netivot, where he is buried. The atmosphere is colorful and festival-like with entire families from all over the country spending the day in song, in picnicking and in prayer. People crowd the tomb to light memorial candles and petition the rabbi to intercede on their behalf in heaven. [Israel photo]

TORONTO — Canada has just three per cent of the world's stock market capitalizations. It follows then, that 97 per cent of the best opportunities for financial gain and growth are outside our borders. When it comes to RRSP investing that is definitely something to keep in mind.

When most Canadians think of their RRSPs, they think solely of Canadian investments. In fact, a full 20 per cent of their RRSP can be held in foreign investments. That is 20 per cent of the book value, not just this year's contribution. It is predicted that that proportion may be increased by the federal government in the coming years.

There are two compelling arguments for looking to add global diversification to an RRSP. The first is the tremendous opportunity for growth in markets that exist outside our borders. While Canadian markets have performed well in recent years, they have typically underperformed most industrialized nations over the preceding 10 years.

Specifically, in examining the average annual growth rate of world markets over the last decade, Canada's advance represents about one-third of that of the United States, Europe and Japan, and about one-quarter of the growth rate of Hong Kong.

And when you consider the opportunities offered by the fast-growing economies of the Southeast Asian countries, China, India, Latin America and South Africa, the potential for greater returns is attractive indeed. Perhaps this is something to keep in mind when you are preparing for this year's RRSP contribution.

The second reason for pursuing a global strategy is that true international diversification also adds a defensive element to your portfolio. In addition to providing tremendous growth opportunities, investing abroad helps to spread the risk of capital loss and protect against short-term fluctuations experienced in a single market.

As recently as five years ago, a balanced portfolio meant that one held a broad selection of Canadian and U.S. fixed-income, money market instruments and a range of equities. Today, with increasing globalization of securities markets, that philosophy is somewhat outdated.

Protect yourself

Invest in markets that jig when ours jag, and you will be protecting yourself in case of a drop in the Canadian equity market. You will also be reducing your vulnerability to a decline in the Canadian dollar by having securities denominated in currencies of other countries.

Surprising then that the vast majority of Canadian RRSP holders still have not caught on. In a retirement survey released by Fidelity Investments of Canada, a shocking 70 per cent of RRSP holders report having no foreign content in their plan. Only three per cent are taking advantage of the maximum allowable limit.

Why is growth in your RRSP so important? Not many Canadians can rely on government support programs to maintain their lifestyle through retirement. With an aging population and massive government debt, many of the current programs may not exist in the way they do now, by the time baby boomers begin to retire.

The other main reason why a very strong RRSP is important lies in inflation. It's like a hidden tax. For every percentage point your retirement portfolio grows, it must be adjusted downward to account for the erosion of the purchasing power of the dollar. For example, if you earn $40,000 per year, in 10 years you would have to earn $50,210 to retain the purchasing power you have today, assuming an annual four per cent rate of inflation. In 25 years, that amount would rise to $106,663 — income that will most likely have to come from a retirement plan.

In summary, to get the most from your RRSP investments, you should be taking advantage of the foreign limit. What is the best way to do this?

For most investors, mutual funds represent the easiest and most effective means of international diversification, either through an international portfolio fund, or through depth in one particular region of the world, such as Europe or Japan.

Plan your nest egg properly, and you won't be asking yourself, "Will I have enough money for my old age?" but rather, "Will I have enough old age for my money?"

Israel's interest rates remain at 17 per cent

JERUSALEM (JTA) — Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel stood his ground last week and decided to leave interest rates unchanged at 17 per cent, despite pressure from Finance Minister Avraham Shohat and the private sector to lower rates.

Nevertheless, Frenkel said interest rates would go down in the coming months should there be clear signs that inflation is moderating.

"Lowering interest rates today could be understood as a premature declaration of victory over our foe inflation, and, as a result, it can weaken the determination to fight inflation," Frenkel said.

Shohat said the central bank's decision was a mistake. "The Bank of Israel should have lowered interest rates and there were good economic justifications for such a move."

Frenkel defended his decision saying, "there are real signs the Bank Of Israel's policy of monetary restraint has begun to bear fruit." Frenkel pointed the slower growth in the M1 and lower inflationary expectations in the capital market. "Nevertheless, it is still not possible to state with full confidence that the inflation goal for 1995 will be reached. We want to wait for an additional period to allow the positive signs to base themselves, which will lead, in the end, to a lasting reduction in inflation,"

There are still some pockets of worry, according to Frenkel. In the past three months, wholesale price rises accelerated while housing prices picked up last month after moderating somewhat in the previous two months.

The governor rejected the call for a symbolic rate cut, saying the central bank would only be ready to send such signals if they were backed up by concrete steps such as significant government spending cuts and tax burden reductions.

Frankel's policy was criticized by the private sector. Dan Propper, the president of the Manufacturers Association said the government must force the Bank to lower interest rates to prevent a recession.

"The Israeli economy is currently moving towards a crisis and the point of no return is not far off," he said. "The government has to look for all possible ways to force the Bank of Israel to change its monetary policy, which is sweeping us towards a severe crisis."

The Municipal Trust Company

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The Municipal Trust Company is so committed to providing high quality customer service it offers the Municipal Trust $5 Guarantee to any customer dissatisfied with the service.

"We will give you $5 if you are not treated with courtesy and respect," a company brochure reads. Quick and accurate service is also part of this guarantee. The company will pay up if customers wait more than five minutes in line; or find errors in their statements or passbooks.

Service is the key to Municipal Trusts' success, Richard Poremba, a marketing field manager, told the CJN. "We are committed to our clients."

The Municipal Trust Company, which is based exclusively in Ontario, was founded by Max Rotstein in 1971. The company began with a single location in Barrie and now has 29 branches. It boasts assets of more than $1.2 billion.

The company has focused servicing the heartland of Ontario creating the type of atmosphere that would be compatible with doing business in small cities and towns. The individual branches are homey — the furniture is comfortable, there's always fresh coffee and the staff know their customers by name.

This is the atmosphere Municipal Trust strives to create at it's branch office at Bathurst and Wilson in North York. For 24 years the company limited its business in Toronto to mortgages and GICs. This continued to be the situation when the North York branch opened in February of 1993.

However, there were increasing requests from customers for full banking services, Poremba said. And so in May of 1994 this branch became a full service centre offering checking and savings and U.S. dollar accounts, RRSPs, RRIFs, loans, lines of credit, bill payments etc.

Wide range

While Municipal Trust provides a wide range of services to all segments of the community — the products are competitive — it also has some specialty products for seniors and children.

People age 50 and over are eligible to join the Golden Circle Club. Members can take advantage of higher interest rates — one quarter per cent more for the First Rate 50 plus Investment Chequing account as well as monthly investment certificates.

Free personalized and certified cheques, reduced cheque processing charges, no charge to pay utilities, are other advantages. Golden Circle Club members also get travel package discounts arranged through Municipal Travel, which is owned by the trust company. At the North York branch there is also a Yiddish speaking teller used primarily by seniors.

Municipal Trust has established the Golden Nuggets Club for children who do their banking there. Members receive monthly gifts when they make deposits. The company allows the children to take out five-year GICs on amounts as low as $100.

"This is our way of getting the children to understand how to save money and not be afraid of banking," Poremba said.

The Municipal Trust Company prides itself on community relations. The different branches get involved with their local communities sponsoring sports teams and participating in special events. For example in Trenton the company enters a bathtub in the annual bathtub race and the staff dress in period costume during Orangeville Medieval Festival.

The company also holds customer appreciation days twice a year, offering refreshments and prizes to its customers, Poremba said. "It's our way of saying thanks."

The focus on customer satisfaction and comfort sets Municipal Trust apart from other banking institutions, he said. "We're friendly, we have competitive products, our service is second to none and the coffee is always free."

Green-Eclipse provides clean air for your home

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

The recent unveiling of Canada's first Envirodesic subdivision means homeowners may no longer become ill from poor indoor air quality.

All 116 homes to be built by Fifthshire Homes Ltd. in Sharon, a community north of Toronto, will receive Envirodesic certification for maximum indoor air quality, the first environmental certification program that promotes personal health and well-being.

The program is administered by Green-Eclipse Incorporated, an international team of experts in low-pollution design, toxicology, medicine and indoor air quality.

Among its services, Green-Eclipse offers a homeowner referral service, inspection and consulting service, and assistance to builders and renovators in producing Envirodesic homes and home renovations. The company also works with building owners and managers, government, developers, architects, engineers and other design professionals to create healthier indoor environments in homes, schools and commercial and public buildings.

"The government has been slow in this field but clean, indoor homes is a first step in saving OHIP money because people will stop having to see the doctor for allergy-related symptoms," says Bruce Small, president of Green-Eclipse.

Small describes Envirodesic, a trademark of Green-Eclipse, as a new generation of healthy homes that protect families from harmful pollution. "Research shows that we are being exposed to a lot of pollution these days. Indoor air is often three to five times more polluted than outdoor air. You can't avoid it everywhere, but your own home is under your control and can provide you with 12 to 15 hours a day of cleaner air and a healthier environment," he says.

A graduate of engineering science at University of Toronto, Small was diagnosed as being chemically sensitive in 1975, after a bout of mild symptoms including stomach aches, headaches, rashes and irritability. Even after removing harmful pollutants from his home, he decided the city was not good for him, his wife and young daughter. They moved to Stouffville and built what is now known as Sunnyhill, the family residence and the flagship for the Envirodesic project's research program.

Sunnyhill's controlled environment is constructed with low-emission materials; the building is organized in environmental zones to allow for the testing of the effects of different Envirodesic configurations on indoor air quality and health.

Small says his plan is to create an education, rehabilitation and counselling program to equip people to combat environmental hypersensitivity and to reverse the health damage and psychological stresses associated with it.

"People need lifestyle changes, but they also need to know what to do to change. We will teach them how to create a clean space."

"This family will have fewer illnesses, more productive work and increased vitality. Having a healthy home to return to is like having insurance."

Susan Daglish, executive director of the Allergy and Asthma Information Centre agrees. "As Canadians we spend over 50 per cent of our life indoors, so ensuring that our home is a safe haven is important," she says.

Sunnyhill, in Stoufville, Ont., is the flagship for Green-Eclipse's clean-air program.

Small says at least 40 per cent of households now contain people who are hypersensitive to common chemical odors, dust, moulds and pollens. Pregnant women, the elderly and people with respiratory ailments or heart disease are particularly susceptible to many pollutants.

"The bottom line is that everyone deserves a healthy environment. Everyone can benefit from avoiding toxic contaminants and providing the best possible environment for their family."

Outdoor pollution doesn't outweigh the benefits of a healthy environment, Small says. "There is a growing body of medical evidence suggesting that the body's health reserves can be recharged by spending time in healthy environments. An Envirodesic family can look forward to going out into the world to live full lives and then return to a safe, healthy, healing home environment to recharge.

"There is no question that over the last two decades, our buildings have become more enclosed — trapping ever increasing amounts of allergens and irritants within our homes and offices. A home which provides protection against this increasing exposure is welcome news," Daglish says.

Peter Russell and Jim White, of the research division of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC), say the corporation has been involved for over a decade in the investigation of indoor air pollution, low-pollution building design, and housing for the environmentally hypersensitive. They say that Small has contributed greatly to their research.

Small says he applauds builders "like John and Michelina DiCarlo, Joe Vella and all the others on the Fifthshire Homes Ltd. design and construction team who care enough to create high quality, energy-conservative, environmentally responsible, healthy homes. Fifthshire pioneered the all-steel structure home and is now Canada's leading builder of Envirodesic homes, which combine the best of their present design features with the most powerful low indoor pollution features to produce a home with maximum indoor air quality."

Standard Envirodesic features include an all-steel structure with no wood studs or joists; a well-drained and sealed basement; a clean, well-sealed, fully accessible ducting system which reduces leakage and is easily cleaned; low-emission cabinetry which eliminates formaldehyde fumes and odor; easy cleaning ceramic tile floors in kitchens and bathrooms.

Optional features include a steel roof, custom designed home office with extra ventilation, ventilated storage areas and a special pet zoning option with isolation areas that confine pet hairs and danders to designated areas.

Small stresses that the price range for Envirodesic homes begins at par with other quality-built homes and, as with conventional construction, the line begins with a standard model and a series of options for materials, size, number of rooms, layout, building style and other features.

"These additional options allow the consumer to tailor the choice of materials to individual tastes and specific sensitivities and to match the number of added features and facilities to the family's lifestyle and budget. All options are Envirodesic in material, design and installation. For those consumers who choose a fully loaded model and upscale finishings, the price and range might extend to 15 to 20 per cent above the standard model."

What does Small see ahead for Green-Eclipse? "We intend to expand services into new geographic locations and new building markets. The geographic expansion will include the rest of Canada, the United States, Mexico, Europe, Australia, the former Soviet Union, Southeast Asia and ultimately the lesser developed countries of the world where there is now great pressure for additional building development. The new building markets will include commercial, industrial, institutional and public buildings, as well as new product development and distributor licensing."

Green-Eclipse Incorporated is now in the process of offering a number of investment opportunities for people and organizations to participate in the growth and development of the company and the launch of Envirodesic homes into the Southern Ontario market.

The Oxford Book Of Aging, edited by Thomas R. Cole & Mary G. Winkler, Oxford University Press $34.95

When he was 95, Bernard de Fontenelle, secretary of the French Academy of Science, was assured by a woman of 90, "Death has forgotten us." "Sssh!," responded de Fontenelle, putting his fingers over his mouth.

But the Angel of Death doesn't forget and sooner or later, he gathers in his crop. He is the inexorable international harvester.

For some persons, the inescapability of aging is a source of deep sadness. The melancholy Schopenhauer wrote in 1893, "Disillusion is the chief characteristic of old age; for by that time the fictions are gone which gave life its charm and spurred on the mind to activity; the splendors of the world have been proved null and vain; its pomp, grandeur, and magnificence are faded . . . and so he comes by degrees to see that our existence is all empty and void."

The American poet and historian Cornel Lengyel echoed these sentiments: "All that we boast as our works or revelations, all that we build and launch for the stars, all that we will, scheme, dare and dream, all that we do is perishable. The labor of our hands: a mound of ashes. Our book for the ages: a thing of dust. Our dearest child: a passing creature of perpetual change. All our works, borrowed from usurious Time, all are perishable."

Yet, numerous men and women find that old age can be the most creative and fulfilling time in their lives — a time not of decline but of liberation from the ambitions, anxieties and vanities that plague the young.

Some elderly persons find fulfilment in their work. Sigmund Freud wrote, "I cannot face with comfort the idea of life without work; work and the free play of the imagination are for me the same thing, I take no pleasure in anything else."

A time of liberation

Others find meaning or comfort in an extended family, or the contemplation of nature, or the wisdom that flows from keener judgement and wider experience, or the consolations of religion.

The Bible asserts that "a hoary head is a crown of glory." The Talmud tells of a sage who is asked the secret of his longevity. He responds, "I have never been angry with my family, I have never envied persons greater than myself and I have never gloated over anyone's downfall."

The Ethics of the Fathers (second century CE) teaches: "At 18, marriage; at 20, the pursuit of a livelihood; at 30, the peak of strength; at 40, wisdom; at 50, able to give counsel; at 60, old age creeping on; at 70, fullness of years; at 80, the age of 'strength'; at 90, body bent; at 100, as good as dead and gone completely out of the world."

The biblical reference to a life of three score years and ten is surprising because it was far above the average life-span of the time. In the days of the Romans old age was thought to begin at 46.

The Oxford Book of Aging is an impressive, wide-ranging anthology of over 250 selections of fiction, poetry and memoirs from ancient times to our own day. It contains the reflections of thoughtful and sensitive men and women on a subject of unfailing and universal interest.

The final words belong to Malcolm Muggeridge who viewed his imminent death in poetic terms, "So, like a prisoner awaiting his release, like a schoolboy when the end of term is near, like a migrant bird ready to fly south, like a patient in hospital anxiously scanning the doctor's face to see whether a discharge may be expected, I long to be gone. Extricating myself from the flesh I have too long inhabited, hearing the key turn in the lock of Time so that the great doors of Eternity swing open, disengaging my tired mind from its interminable conundrums, and my tired ego from its wearisome insistences. Such is the prospect of death."

Shakespeare, Tolstoy and Cynthia Ozick: American Jewish novelist and essayist Cynthia Ozick, wrote a letter to the New York Times Book Review recently after a reviewer (Paul Rabinow) criticized a novel about the discovery of the polymerase chain reaction because the actual development of this technique wasn't as the novelist described. Ozick was offended that "a work of fiction is faulted, in short, precisely because it is fictional."

Her letter continued: "Thus instructed on how properly to approach storytelling, perhaps readers less sophisticated than Mr. Rabinow will now bring to Hamlet a more demanding eye for the anthropology of feudal Denmark; and surely the arrival of the train in Anna Karenina should be checked against that day's railway schedules?"

New Name for Concert Hall: Shakespeare asked, what's in a name? In the case of the newly renamed George Weston Recital Hall, all that's involved is a mere $750,000. That's what George Weston Ltd. and the W. Garfield Weston Foundation donated so that the name of the late bakery magnate would grace the Recital Hall of the Ford Centre for the Performing Arts in Lastmanville — otherwise known as North York.

Private fundraising is an important part of North York's strategy to help finance the construction of the theatre without raising taxes, says Mayor Mel Lastman. "We've raised $9.25 million through namings, and I figure we can raise about $2 million more," he says. "To my knowledge, the maximum ever raised anywhere has been $4.5 million."

TV show retells saga of desperate Jewish refugees

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

The saga of the SS St. Louis, the German luxury liner which tweaked the conscience of the world on the eve of World War II, is retold in an absorbing one-hour documentary on TVOntario, Feb. 8 at 10 p.m.

The Voyage of the St. Louis is a story of anti-Semitic persecution, desperate Jewish refugees and official indifference.

The facts of this episode — a microcosm of the Jewish condition in Germany — have been documented before in books and films (most notably in Ship of Fools).

On May 13, 1939, this Hamburg-Amerika Line ship set sail from Germany with almost 1,000 German Jews aboard. All were fleeing Nazi barbarity, bound for what they thought was a haven in Cuba. When the St. Louis reached Havana, the authorities turned it away, refusing to honor the passengers' Cuban visas.

The ship's anti-Nazi captain, Gustav Schroeder, steered the St. Louis toward American waters off Florida, but the U.S. Coast Guard kept it at bay. Meanwhile, President Franklin Roosevelt ignored a telegram from the passengers requesting asylum. The Canadian government adopted the same position.

Heading back to Europe after almost a month at sea, Schroeder contemplating scuttling the St. Louis off the coast of Britain to force a resolution of the problem. But before he could do so, the American Joint Distribution Committee convinced four countries — Britain, France, Holland and Belgium — to accept the hapless refugees.

The Voyage of the St. Louis, written and directed by Maziar Bahari, chronicles the sordid affair through file footage and interviews with survivors, some of whom were reunited at a reunion in Miami Beach.

We learn there was a generally carefree atmosphere among the passengers as the St. Louis steamed towards the Caribbean. They were looking forward to "a new beginning," they enjoyed the food and the facilities and they were treated respectfully by the crew.

We also learn that Schroeder set aside a room for synagogue services, removing a portrait of Hitler and reinstating it the following day.

We're told that gloom enveloped the ship when the corrupt Cubans reneged on their pledge; that one elderly gentleman died of heartbreak when he realized he would never see Germany again; that one man tried to commit suicide by jumping into Havana harbor; that Canadian Prime Minister Mackenzie King, who was personally not well disposed toward Jews, turned over the case to a blatant anti-Semitic official, Frederick Blair.

Ultimately, most of the passengers met an unhappy ending. Those who found refuge in England, some 287, lived through the war. But nearly all the rest, in Nazi-occupied France, Belgium and Holland, perished in the Holocaust.

As for the St. Louis, it was bombed and destroyed by an Allied air raid on Hamburg toward the close of the war.

Rabbi Plaut is subject of profile in series on 'inspiring' Canadians

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Gunther Plaut, one of Canada's most distinguished rabbis, is the subject of a glowing profile on Vision TV on Feb. 7 at 10 p.m.

It is seen on Stories of our Becoming, a 13-part series on Canadians who have demonstrated "a particularly inspiring passion for life." The hostess is Maxine Hancock, who engages Rabbi Plaut in an animated conversation at his congregation and in his home.

Born in Germany, Rabbi Plaut immigrated to the United States in the mid-1930s. During World War II, he served as a chaplain in the American army.

In 1945, he witnessed the liberation of two concentration camps, Dora and Mauthausen, an experience which left an indelible impression. For many years, he was senior rabbi at Holy Blossom, a Reform synagogue in Toronto and the first shul in Upper Canada.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut

Prolific author

After his retirement, he produced a report on refugees for the Canadian government. Recently, he finished a book on the same topic for York University.

A columnist with The Canadian Jewish News, Rabbi Plaut is a prolific author, a Judaic scholar and an avid tennis player. Indeed, he is a man of many parts, and Hancock clearly revels in his company.

Recalling his youth in Germany, Rabbi Plaut acknowledges that he and his father were convinced that Hitler "wouldn't last" and that the Nazi era would soon "blow over."

Turning sentimental, Rabbi Plaut thanks his good fortune for having met his feisty wife, Elizabeth. She terms their courtship as the beginning of "a beautiful friendship."

He describes the rabbinate as a "marvellous calling," recalls his love for preaching and teaching, and voices pride in his popular commentaries on the Torah.

In reply to a naive question, he admits, with a sense of resignation, that he has become "used" to the scourge of anti-Semitism.

In closing, Rabbi Plaut talks about his attachment to Israel (which he initially visited when it was still a British mandate), and pays warm tribute to his late parents, who were excellent role models.

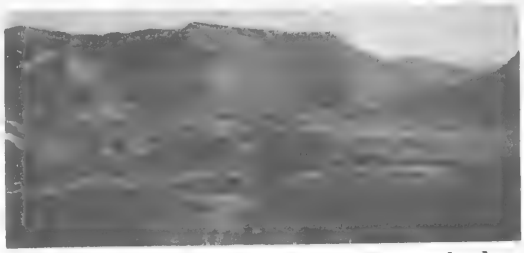
The Negev should not be missed

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter



The Negev, Israel's last frontier. [Sheldon Kirshner photo]

MIZPE RAMON — All too frequently, tourists in Israel gloss over, or completely bypass, the central Negev, a desert filled with fantastic geological formations, exotic plants, secluded oases and historic sites.

This is a pity, since the Negev is really Israel's last relatively untouched, unspoiled frontier. Travellers would be wise to include it in their plans.

I spent one full day there last November, exploring it in the company of an Israeli Bedouin named Izzat Abu-Rabia, one of the principals of a company called Adventures in Nature. He was born near Beersheba and knows the Negev like the back of his hand.

We started in Mizpe Ramon, a town which sits on the edge of a series of awesome craters. The nearest — a two-minute drive from the Ramon Inn, where we had camped for the night — is the Ramon crater. Close by are two other craters, known in Hebrew as Ha-Makhtesh Ha-Gadol (the world's largest) and Ha-Makhtesh Ha-Qatan.

All three are spectacular, characterized by steep, jagged canyons, rolling, stony plains, natural springs and wadis. The wadis are dry most of the year, but can turn into dangerous torrents during the winter flood season.

Izzat and I toured the Negev in a four-wheel drive jeep, an amazing vehicle which can negotiate the most demanding terrain. The ride was often bumpy, but always fun.

With the jeep, we were able to cover a lot of ground in just a matter of hours.

As we drove, Izzat — a fount of local lore — talked of the Spice Route, a circuitous caravan trail from India which, in ancient times, passed through the Negev from the Arabian peninsula and Petra.

Changing the topic, he waxed excited about the "dike." The subject of his ardor turned out to be a stunning formation, a canyon of serrated rock resplendent in shades of turquoise, orange and beige.

At his suggestion, we clambered up Givat Charut, a cone-shaped peak which, at 420 metres, is one of the highest points in Ha-Makhtesh Ha-Gadol. The view was alluring.

Later, we strolled through Ein Sakhronim, a natural spring dotted with reeds, date palms and tamarind trees.

Next, we stopped at the ruins of a Nabatean khan, or caravanserai, a major way station on the Spice Route. It conjured up images of a bygone era.

Izzat reminded me that the desert supports a wide variety of flora. On our walks, we'd pause to examine such plants as morningstar, which relieves pain and flavors tea; sage, which combats diarrhea and nausea; and broom, which is tasty in salads.

Ein Zik, an isolated oasis, runs zigzaggedly along a spring protected by groves of palms, poplars, reeds and bushes. It is one of the only sustained patches of greenery in the desolation of the Wilderness of Zin, and thus, something of a miracle.

Regrettably, we couldn't stay long, since the day was waning and the forecast called for rain. I left Ein Zik with a sense of loss, determined to return for a longer sojurn sooner rather than later.

Izzat Abu-Rabia can be reached at Kibbutz Shefayim (972-595595). Further information about the Negev is available from the Israel Government Tourist Office in Toronto, 416-964-3784.

Peace agreement will open up Israel-Jordan border to tourists

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Several months ago, Shmuel Zurel, a senior official in Israel's Ministry of Tourism, was part of a government delegation that boarded a helicopter outside the Knesset in Jerusalem, then headed eastward to the Jordanian capital of Amman.

The journey, says Zurel, took just 15 minutes, and underscored the new, open relationship between the two nations since they inked a peace agreement last year.

"It was amazing to see that my home is just 15 minutes away from there," said Zurel during a recent visit to Toronto. "To see Jordanian and Israeli soldiers mingling, and having personal discussions around a table was very exciting."

At a breakfast meeting hosted by the Israel Government Tourist Office, Zurel told about 16 Jewish community leaders here that when Israel's neighbors participate in discussions on tourism, it means "you mean business, you want to establish a very solid peace."

The Jordanians, Zurel said, "are highly educated, highly sophisticated people who are very proud of their country and very eager for economic success. On the other hand, they're leaning on a terribly underdeveloped infrastructure. They've made little progress since the British mandate."

Israel had more than two million visitors but Jordan had barely 250,000 last year, Zurel said. And while Israel has about 33,000 hotel rooms, Jordan has only about 8,000 — only half of which would be acceptable in Israel. Of necessity, the Jordanians must limit the number of tourists who arrive via the three crossing points from Israel to 550 people daily.

"If only every third traveller to Israel goes to Jordan, their infrastructure will collapse," Zurel said. But cross-border traffic "is accepted on both sides so naturally, it's almost hard to believe that until recently hostilities took place here."

Complicated situation

Zurel painted a far less optimistic picture with regard to tourism and the Palestinians. Jordan, said Zurel, is a well-organized country with basic methods of governing and passing resolutions — "and with the Palestinians, that's something that is under development right now. Here the situation is much more complicated. When we're talking with the Palestinians, they are an unknown entity. There is a big question mark with each and every delegation. We're not talking to the same people each time."

Through "early empowerment" clauses spelled out in the Israel-PLO peace declaration, Israel will soon turn over authority for tourism in Bethlehem to the Palestinians, Zurel said. Similarly, the Palestinains presently control access to the biblical city of Jericho, which is periodically closed to visitors from Israel.

While many Israelis cross into Jordan to see Petra, some Jordanians have recognized that they don't have to go all the way to Aqaba to get a beach. "Netanya and other Mediterranean cities are now taking very seriously the possibility that a few hundred thousand Jordanians will come to enjoy the Mediterranean shore," Zurel said.

As for Canada, Zurel anticipated that more Canadians will visit Israel than ever before, partly because of new direct flights proposed by Sunquest and Air Canada, in direct competition with El Al.

"The Ministry of Tourism is the number one supporter of El Al, but it bothered us that there was a lack of competition. In the United States, a major airline battle is taking place and prices are being reduced every day. But in Canada, prices have remained the same for five to six years."

Bit by bit, Israel is "coming back to the historical position that it used to have as a crosspoint between continents," said Zurel. "This is why Israel bloomed in ancient days — and we can see it happening again, before our eyes."

Travel Talk

By Bill Gladstone

The pottery factory near Chiang Mai. [Bill Gladstone photo]

The Road to Mandalay: A couple of years ago, while researching an article for a travel magazine, I spent a few days with some other journalists in the northern Thai city of Chiang Mai. The exoticism of the city intrigued us as we explored its medieval walls, visited the nearby mountaintop monastery of Doi Suthep, and went strolling each evening in the bustling night market, which sprawled over many city blocks. There one could buy all manner of goods and souvenirs, artfully carved wooden statues, toys, handmade slippers, leather wallets and fine tablecloths woven by the hill tribes.

At one market stall in a darkened alley, a bent old woman showed me a palm-sized aluminum box with a hinged lid, inlaid with colored stones and decorated with ornate hand-rendered metalwork. An attractive gift, it cost the equivalent of $5. What especially pleased me about my new treasure was that the seller said it was made in the neighboring country of Burma, about 100 km to the west.

At the time, Burma seemed the height of remote adventure and exoticism to me. Cut off in ancient times by its mountains and its kings, and closed to Western tourists for decades, the country's very inaccessibility somehow made it seem all the more alluring. But I've since heard something that has put me off going there.

Officially known as Myanmar after a military coup in 1988, Burma has begun to admit visitors again in recent years. To this end, the harsh military government has recruited many thousands of peasants into forced labor battalions to clean up cities and restore temples. According to the BBC World Service, those who attempt to resist are severely beaten or killed.

Focus on Mandalay

Much of the clean-up effort is being focused on the former Burmese capital of Mandalay, which suffered extensive damage in heavy fighting between Japanese and Allied forces in 1945. Evidently, Burma-Myanmar is planning a major promotional push to attract foreign tourists next year. An optimist would hope that any eventual influx of Western visitors would help raise the government's awareness regarding the human rights of its people.

Israel's Revenue Grab: David Freudmann, director of Israel and Middle East travel for Uniworld Travel in Toronto (416-493-3322) advises that he has received complaints from Canadian travellers who venture from Israel to Jordan. Seems that Israel is exacting a toll equivalent to about $26 (US) per person at the three international crossing points now in operation. Officials in the Israel Government Tourist Office in Toronto confirm the charge but offer no explanation.

Another important point to remember when planning a visit to Jordan is that the Jordanian authorities require all visitors from Israel to spend at least one night in their country.

Youth centre a resource for students visiting Israel

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Amid the hustle and bustle of moving to a new office, Mark Rubinstein is gearing up for his busiest time of year as students plan summer trips to Israel.

"We're fully functional. We're just not pretty," says the 27-year-old coordinator of the Israel Youth Program Centre (IYPC), indicating a wall to be painted and a future video display area. He pauses to tell a worker where to place the last of the boxes.

As a result of the restructuring at the Bathurst Jewish Centre (formerly the Jewish Community Centre North Y branch), the IYPC was forced to vacate its second-floor office but has remained in the building.

"It's important to have Israel represented in the centre of the Jewish community," says Rubinstein. "We made a conscious decision to stay here." The centre leases space from the Bathurst Jewish Centre but otherwise is not affiliated with it.

A constituent of the Canadian Zionist Federation (CZF), the IYPC is a project of the latter's Youth and Hechalutz department. It serves the central Ontario region and is one of seven such offices across Canada.

The centre's mandate is twofold: to provide Israel-related programming in the community (such as the recent Tu b'Shevat youth program held at Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation) and to serve as a resource for students travelling to Israel. "We're a 'one-stop Israel shop'," touts Rubinstein, using a slogan instituted about two years ago.

The centre is a source of information about Israel trips for teens and twentysomethings. Included in its current brochure are Canadian trips, some of which are run by the CZF, and American trips having no Canadian equivalent.

"A typical person will say, 'I want to go to Israel. I have five months,' and we say, 'These are the kinds of programs we have available'. "

Ten years ago Rubinstein himself was "the perfect prototype of what we want here. I belonged to no youth groups. Israel was important in my house, but it was an abstract concept."

Things changed for the native Montrealer, who moved to Toronto at 13, when he went on the now-defunct College Summer Program in 1985. "I fell in love with the country," he said.

Mark Rubinstein is the IYPC coordinator.

Inspired by the example of his madrich (group leader), he went on to study for a year at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and to lead two CZF student trips before completing an MA in political science at York University.

These days Rubinstein fields an average of 20 phone calls a day at the centre, and travels to small communities and public schools in an organized outreach effort.

Rubinstein, the only paid staff member, works together with Tami Savion, Barry Praag and Ariella Liberman, all of whom are here on family shlichut from Israel. Praag and Liberman staff the Kibbutz Aliyah Desk (KAD), which is housed within the IYPC office and is also funded by the CZF. Savion is involved with a number of programs and organized the recent Tu b'Shevat celebration. Rubinstein stressed that the four of them work as a unit.

The centre liaises with the Israel Aliyah Centre and the Israel Government Tourist Office, both of which offer student programs. Kibbutz programs are offered through the KAD.

The Toronto IYPC sent 160 students to Israel last year on summer programs. They were among 500 students Canada-wide to participate in Israel Experience programs offered by the CZF.

The newest CZF summer program booklet is scheduled for release this week. For more information, contact the IYPC at 416-398-6931. Netanyahu offers peace alternative

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu said over the weekend that he has been in contact with Palestinians disenchanted with Yasser Arafat, and has introduced them to the Likud's autonomy plan, which would give Palestinians municipal autonomy.

Netanyahu argues that an alternative to the "failed Oslo accords could be a new alliance between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians," who will get "autonomy in all facets of life, with Israel maintaining full responsibility for security and foreign affairs."

Netanyahu was speaking in weekend interviews on Israeli television and radio.

"In Gaza, this government had already created a fait accompli and the one thing to do now is set up a closed border which will keep Gazans out of Israel.

"This is the one place where a fence makes sense along with land mines. This is a border of several dozen kilometres and not hundreds like in Judea and Samaria. What needs to be done now is to make sure that a fait accompli like in Gaza is not also implemented in the far more dangerous Judea and Samaria.

"The Arabs of the territories must be kept out of Israel and Israel can import labor from other countries, as is done in all parts of the First World. There is nothing wrong with that," Netanyahu maintained.

However, the Opposition leader stressed that his interlocutor would not be Arafat, "who has proven since Oslo that he has not changed one bit and has kept no part of his bargain. He incites to jihad, lauds the suicide bomber, allows murderers to operate from his territory and hunts down collaborators."

Netanyahu said that as far as Syria is concerned, "I would tell [president Hafez] al-Assad that just as he claims the entire Golan, so does Israel. If we go down from the Golan, we would lose every chance there ever was for peace."

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin Saturday night labelled Netanyahu's plan for municipal autonomy "a joke."

Jerusalem housing continues

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Israel intends to continue building new apartments around Jerusalem despite protests from the PLO, Israel's minister of construction and housing said last week.

Benyamin Ben-Eliezer, who was here to sign a memorandum of understanding with his Canadian counterpart and to attend an Israel Bonds function, declared that the status of Jerusalem as Israel's undivided capital is non-negotiable.

"We are going to reinforce this area to strengthen Jerusalem," said Ben-Eliezer, whose plan to tighten Israel's grip on Jerusalem and environs was accepted by the Israeli cabinet late last month.

Under the scheme, the Israeli government will erect upwards of 2,700 new housing units in three settlements in the disputed West Bank abutting Jerusalem – Maale Adumim, Givat Zeev and Betar.

Ben-Eliezer, who was military governor of the West Bank from 1978-1981, declined to discuss the number of apartments above and beyond the 2,700 Israel plans to build in what he described as "metropolitan Jerusalem."

He acknowledged that, under the terms of the 1993 Oslo agreement with the PLO, Jerusalem's final status is subject to negotiations.

But Ben-Eliezer added that Jerusalem's ultimate fate is not subject to "compromise."

Four war criminals face government action

Community leaders express anger

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The wheels of justice finally began turning, albeit slowly, last week as the ministries of immigration and justice jointly announced the start of denaturalization and deportation proceedings against four alleged Nazi war criminals.

Three are Canadian citizens who will face denaturalization proceedings to strip them of their citizenship while the fourth is a landed immigrant against whom deportation procedures will be taken, said Roger White, a spokesperson for Citizenship and Immigration. Though he would not identify the suspects nor describe what they had allegedly done, White said all four reside in the Toronto area. They are alleged to have lied about their wartime activities when applying to immigrate to Canada or when applying for citizenship.

Please see editorial page 8

White said four additional cases will be commenced next year and as many as 12 cases altogether.

The government's announcement elicited at best a lukewarm response from Jewish community leaders, who for years have been pressing the government to take action against Nazi war criminals. Some were satisfied that legal steps were finally being taken, but were concerned over the small number of initial cases, the pace of prosecutions and the admission by government leaders that cost was a factor.

Prior to publicly announcing the proceedings, government officials privately briefed Jewish community leaders and representatives of the Ukrainian community in separate meetings.

Milton Harris, chair of Canadian Jewish Congress' war crimes committee, said the four government officials who conducted the briefing were questioned why the 12 cases that have already been forwarded to Immigration by Justice's war crimes unit were winnowed to four.

When pressed, the officials "hemmed and hawed and finally said it was because of lack of resources," Harris said. "They talked to us about priorities. I don't have to tell you how that sat with every Jewish representative there. We were very angry."

The News In Brief Everywhere

CANADA

Leave Granted

OTTAWA — The Supreme Court of Canada last week granted leave to appeal the issue of public funding for independent, religious-based schools.

The matter of public funding for Jewish day schools and other private schools has been in the courts for years. No date was set for the hearing before the Supreme Court.

The court's decision was welcomed by the Ontario Jewish Association for Equity in Education, an arm of Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region.

Fund for Victims

TORONTO — Beth Tzedec Congregation has established a Fund for Victims of Terror, in response to recent terrorist acts in Israel. The purpose of the fund, the synagogue says, is to provide direct aid to bereaved families and survivors of attacks. Tax deductible donations may be sent to the Fund for Victims of Terror, Beth Tzedec Congregation, 1700 Bathurst St., Toronto, Ont., M5P 3K3, or call 416-781-3511.

CJC Nominations

MONTREAL — Nominations are being accepted for the six elected national officer positions at Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC).

The positions open are president, chair of the national executive, associate chair of the national executive, treasurer, secretary and honorary legal counsel.

Elections to fill the posts will take place May 14 during CJC's national plenary in Montreal.

Nominations must be submitted to the CJC national office no later than April 18. Rules and regulations are available by calling 514-931-7531.

Family Program

WINNIPEG — Winnipeg's Jewish community has reactivated the Family to Family volunteer program in response to a new influx of families, primarily from eastern Europe or the former Soviet Union.

According to Jewish Child and Family Service, about 40 new families have arrived here in recent months — either directly or after a stay in Israel — and more are on the way.

The program matches new arrivals with Winnipeg Jewish families and is being coordinated through the Integration and Acculturation Department of the YMHA Jewish Community Centre.

ISRAEL

Border Marked

JERUSALEM — Israel and Jordan formally marked most of the international border between them at a ceremony in the Arava region last week.

Israel completed the handover to Jordan of disputed lands in the southern Arava, as agreed in the countries' peace treaty. The only parts not transferred are ones used for security patrols.

Under the accord, Israeli farmers are being allowed to work land now officially under Jordanian jurisdiction.

Plans Get OK

JERUSALEM — After years of dispute, plans for construction of a new Jewish neighborhood in Jerusalem's southern limits were given the green light last week.

The Jerusalem municipality's planning committee approved the building of some 6,500 housing units in Har Homa, on lands annexed by Israel after the 1967 war.

Jerusalem council members from the left-wing Meretz party protested the plans, saying they could threaten the peace process.

Haredim Protest

JAFFA — More than 5,000 haredim from Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Bnei Brak demonstrated here last week to protest what they claim is the desecration of Jewish graves at a construction site.

Demonstrators prayed, blew the shofar and carried signs urging officials to halt the building of a parking garage in an area where human bones were found.

Torah in Jericho

JERICHO — In a new twist to Israeli-Palestinian relations, several dozen Jewish settlers were protected by Palestinian police as they brought a new Torah scroll to the ancient synagogue in Palestinian-administered Jericho last week.

As yeshivah students sang and danced around the Torah, Palestinian police remained on duty outside the synagogue.

The police said the synagogue was a religious place, adding that they were under instructions to respect it.

New Activity in S. Lebanon

JERUSALEM — Palestinian rejectionist forces in southern Lebanon have stepped up their activities, the Army's new Chief of Staff, Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak said last week.

His remarks came a day before an Israeli soldier killed in southern Lebanon was laid to rest.

Staff Sgt. Yair Tsafrir was killed during a clash last Tuesday between members of the Golani Brigade and Hezbollah.

Reports from Lebanon said three Hezbollah gunmen were killed and another wounded during the clash, which took place just north of the security zone.

WORLD

Kurt Not Invited

NEW YORK — The World Jewish Congress (WJC) last week welcomed the decision by the United Nations not to invite former Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to the festivities marking the UN's 50th anniversary.

The announcement by UN Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said that none of his predecessors would be invited to the ceremonies.

But the move was widely seen as a means of avoiding a confrontation over Waldheim, who is barred from entering the United States because of his activities with the Third Reich's Wehrmacht during World War II.

New French Leader

PARIS — European Jewish Congress leader Jean Kahn last week was elected president of the organization that handles Jewish religious affairs in France.

The Consistoire was created by Napoleon in 1808. Today it serves the religious needs of 700,000 French Jews.

Kahn is already president of CRIF, the umbrella organization that represents the Jewish community on the political level.

Earthquake Funds

TORONTO — B'nai Brith Canada has launched a fund to help survivors of the earthquake in Kobe, Japan.

Donations may be sent to B'nai Brith Canada, 15 Hove St., Downsview, Ont. M3H 4Y8.

Those wishing to assist the quake's survivors may also contact the following organizations:

- American Jewish World Service, 15 West 26th St., 9th floor, New York, N.Y., 10010, U.S.A., 212-683-1161.
- Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, 333 Seventh Ave., New York, N.Y., 10001, 212-563-4000.
- JDC-Japan Open Mailbox, JDC, 711 Third Ave., New York, N.Y., 10017-4014 212-687-6200.

Those wishing to contact the Ohel Shelomoh Synagogue in Kobe can write to the Jewish Community of Kansai, 12/12 Kitano-cho 4 chome, Chuo-ku, Port P.O. Box No. 639, Kobe, Japan 651-01.

Shared Responsibility

BONN — The Conference of German Bishops has admitted the "shared responsibility" of the Catholic Church for anti-Semitism during World War II.

In a statement issued here, the bishops said they regretted the "absence of resistance by many Catholics against the Nazis."

The statement was issued as political and religious leaders from around the world gathered in Poland to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz.

The bishops also admitted that the Catholic Church was guilty during the Third Reich of harboring anti-Semitic attitudes.

Free Trade With Hungary

BUDAPEST — A free-trade agreement between Israel and Hungary will be signed this year and implemented in 1996, an Israel ministry of commerce official said here last week.

A five-member Israeli foreign trade delegation held talks for two days with Hungarian representatives of the Budapest Trade Ministry.

No more tariffs could triple trade between the two countries, officials said.

Istvan Csejtei, the newly appointed Hungarian ambassador to Israel, said the agreement could be signed in May.

Israeli officials are to hold exploratory talks in Prague and Warsaw about additional free trade agreements, officials added.

HEBREW BASIC BURIAL

Beginning January 1995, Jewish families will be able to arrange economical yet dignified interment through HEBREW BASIC BURIAL. Traditional Halachic standards are strictly observed. This new alternative caters to families who are comfortable with a traditional graveside service and a more involved role in order to reduce expenses.

HEBREW BASIC BURIAL is the only all-Jewish facility in Metropolitan Toronto which provides this adherence to Halacha and attention to detail at exceptionally low cost.

Baycrest to build new home for aged

Centre for Cognitive Disorders part of plan

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A new and larger Jewish Home for the Aged (JHA) to be built on the parking lot west of the Baycrest complex will open in 1999 or before.

The new home will have 472 beds, 100 of which are to be in a Centre for Cognitive Disorders in the same building. An official said a "ball park figure" on the cost is $65 million. The minimum two-year project is expected to begin in 1996.

The current Abe and Elsie Posluns Home for the Aged has 372 beds, and when it opened in 1968, at a cost of $7.5 million, it was a showcase. However, it is now considered to be outdated. It will be used to house Baycrest's education and research activities, as well as new community programs to support older adults in their own homes.

The needs of an aging Jewish population in Toronto are sharply different than they were in the 1960s explained Stephen W. Herbert, Baycrest president and CEO. At that time only 25 per cent of the elderly in the Home had a cognitive deficit but today the figure is 70 per cent, caused by conditions such as Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease and stroke. When the current Home opened, the average age of the residents was 75; now it is 86.

"The majority of today's residents rely on wheelchairs, walkers or personal assistance to get around," Herbert said.

"We cannot adapt the existing JHA to meet the current and future needs of physically and cognitively frail elderly," said Stephen Cole, chairman of the Board of Baycrest. "Renovations would be inefficient, costly and result in fewer beds."

A recent study commissioned by Baycrest concluded that the existing building fails to meet basic guidelines in terms of room size, dining and activity space, and other amenities.

The extra 100 beds in the new Home will enable Baycrest to make some inroads on the waiting list, said Moshe Greengarten, vice-president of public and community affairs.

Though it will be a separate building, he said, the new Home between the present complex and Baycrest Terrace will be connected to the Baycrest Hospital with a walkway or tunnel.

While the new JHA will focus on people with cognitive disorders caused by illness, the 100-bed Centre for Cognitive Disorders is for adults whose cognitive abilities have been damaged by stroke and other types of vascular dementia.

"Alzheimer's is an incurable degenerative disease," said Dr. Michael Gordon, vice-president of medical services.

"Stroke and vascular dementias on the other hand can cause memory loss that may not progress unless the person has another stroke or medical illness. The centre will be tailored to the needs of individuals with vascular dementia, rather than progressive dementia caused by Alzheimer's."

Leah Posluns to reopen as multi-use facility

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC) has hired a part-time administrator for the Leah Posluns Theatre (LPT) and intends to open the North York facility as a multi-use space.

Anthony Schatzky, the new theatre adminstrator, said "the Leah Posluns Theatre will be closed for a short time and it will be up and running in a matter of months. It will have many uses beyond theatre events.

"It will be a place for people to see the arts but will also be used for lectures, literary readings and there will be more opportunities for Jewish and broader community groups to use the space."

The 444-seat theatre has been closed since last August when the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) dismissed 31 staffers, including all LPT staff as part of a reorganization to stave off bankruptcy. (It was open briefly for the Jewish Book Fair.) Spokespeople for the JCC and the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto said the theatre was a money-loser, a contention hotly denied by former LPT staff and management.

Schatzky comes to the theatre on a part-time basis and will spend about three days a week there. He is currently adminstrator at the Association of Cultural Executives, a national professional development organization for those in the arts. Prior to that, he served as general manager of Ballet Jorgen, a Toronto dance committee dedicated to developing new choreographers, and before that he was general manager of Solar Stage in North York.

Schatzky, 42, said he will prepare a preliminary report on the state of the LPT to be delivered to the BJC's interim board in the near future.

In an interview with The CJN, Schatzky said that the short term plans for the theatre are to renovate it to bring it into compliance with the fire marshall's orders. It can then be made available for short term rentals for shows or for receptions.

Looking further into the future, Schatzky said the theatre will be used for music, dance and theatrical productions. In addition, "we hope to offer a forum series of speakers like the St. Lawrence Centre."

In the long term, the facility will probably be used to present theatrical productions, as opposed to the previous practice of producing the shows in house. That means that the LPT will allow theatrical companies to mount plays at the theatre and negotiate the financial terms of the arrangement.

Another change from past practice is that "the Koffler Centre is now responsible for the theatre under the BJC umbrella," Schatzky said. As administrator of the theatre, Schatzky will report to Joan Tooke, director of the Koffler Centre. She in turn is responsible to the board of directors of the BJC. The LPT offices have been moved closer to the BJC's main lobby.

The intention of the BJC is to bring the dance, theatre and visual arts components closer together, he added.

The Law of Babysitting

PART 1 OF 6

I have frequently been asked to answer a vexing question for parents who leave older children to babysit younger children. Legally, what is the liability of the parents in such a situation? How old does a child have to be before you can leave him or her with younger children?

Canada's Criminal Code

In most cases, Canada's Criminal Code does not apply. Under Section 218, everyone who unlawfully abandons or exposes a child who is under the age of 10 years, so that its life is or is likely to be endangered or its health is or is likely to be permanently injured, is guilty of an indictable offense and is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years. However, the practical use of this section is very limited and would only apply to parents who left children under the age of 10 alone in a situation where his or her life would be endangered.

For instance, in one case, a child under the age of 10 was left in a motor vehicle for an indefinite period of time in an environment which posed a threat to his life due to the cold temperature and risk of abduction. It was no excuse that the accused intended to return several hours later at a time when, according to expert evidence, the child would still be alive. It is the act of endangering that constitutes the offense. [See the case of R. V. Holzer (1988), 63 C. R. (3d) 301 (Alberta Queen's Bench)].

Ontario

In Ontario, no person having charge of a child less than 16 years of age shall leave the child without making provision for his or her supervision and care that is reasonable in the circumstances. [See Section 79(3) of the Child and Family Services Act.] The subsection does not stipulate what "reasonable in the circumstances" means. However, a further section of the same Act stipulates that where a person is charged with leaving a child less than 10 years of age without making such reasonable provision, then it is up to that person to prove to the court that the child's supervision and care was reasonable in the circumstances. [See Section 79(4) of the same Act.] If the child was between the ages of 10 and 16, then it is up to the Crown prosecuting the parents or guardians to prove that the child's supervision and care was not reasonable in the circumstances.

Endowment fund launched by Hamilton federation

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — The establishment of a Hamilton Jewish Community Endowment Fund is a historic moment for the community, said David Steinberg, Hamilton-Wentworth Federation president.

The announcement was the highlight of the federation's recent annual general meeting at the Jewish Community Centre (JCC).

Steinberg commended Abe Szpirglas, federation past president; CeCe Schreiber, past chair of Hamilton United Jewish Welfare Fund (UJWF); and federation treasurer Bill Halpren for their preliminary work on the fund. He also said the three will now serve on a committee to develop bylaws and policies.

The fund, Steinberg said, will be devoted to "the acquisition of moneys to sustain all aspects of Jewish life in Hamilton," as well as for cultural, educational and artistic programs.

Steinberg hopes federation will establish a cultural arts committee to present such programs formerly offered by the JCC.

Steinberg said he will ask the allocations committee "to consider the feasibility of making allocations contingent in some way upon programming designed to enhance Jewish life in Hamilton."

Committee chair Abe Szpirglas said he has found that in other North American Jewish centres, communities that have endowment funds are "healthy communities capable of providing for and responding to the needs of the community."

He said the fund plans to establish an investment advisory committee of community leaders with financial, business, legal and other professional experience.

Despite a difficult year in which some large donations fell victim to the recession, UJWF campaign co-chair, Cheryl Greenbaum reported an overall "card per card" increase of nine per cent over last year, while co-chair Dr. Rick Black pointed out that "the majority of the campaign comes from $20, $100 and $1,000 gifts."

Other federation executive members are president-elect, George Czutrin, and vice-presidents Dr. Lawrence Hart, CeCe Schreiber, Cheryl Greenbaum and Ina Frank.

Hecht calls for end to Jewish 'turf battles'

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Relying on the strength of a 40-year record of community involvement, Montrealer Thomas Hecht told Canadian Jewish Congress' national executive last weekend he is vying for the post of Congress president.

Speaking to The CJN earlier, Hecht said he has the endorsement of Jewish community leaders from across Canada. On the verge of retiring as president of Continental Pharma Cryosan, a medical services company, Hecht said he is ready to devote his time to community issues.

He said if elected, he plans to increase the profile of Israel on the Congress agenda as well as seek "greater accommodation with other Jewish organizations, instead of confrontation."

It was time to end "turf battles" between groups and pursue "a common agenda of continuity, deep-seated love for Israel and the committment that Jews can express themselves as Jews in Canada and elsewhere," Hecht said.

Turning his attention to a wider front, Hecht said Congress should establish linkages to Jewish groups worldwide. "This is a question of solidarity, but also, the landscape is changing. There is a European Union created, the dismemberment of the Soviet Union." He said Congress must seek stronger links to Jewish communities in distress.

Keeping his attention on global issues, Hecht said Congress also has a role to "reach out to the gentler side of Islam and reach out to people of good will and defeat the forces of darkness as represented by Islamic fundamentalism.

"Congress should take the lead in developing the response by the government of Canada to terrorism and state-sponsored terrorism."

Hecht said the Canadian government should not be left off the hook when it comes to prosecuting war criminals. A child survivor, Hecht said Nazi war criminals should be prosecuted criminally where the evidence warrants and deported where a criminal case cannot be established.

Hecht said if elected he would bring a "consensus-building, hands-on managment style" to the job along with full-time dedication. He said he'd "open Congress to a rainbow coalition of new ideas" and he suggested students should be represented on Congress' national executive as well as among its officers.

A native of Czechoslovakia, Hecht escaped to Canada in 1942 as a 12-year-old. His community activity goes back to the early 1950s when he was involved with the Montreal Jewish Federation. Since then, he has served as president of the Montreal Herzl Health Centre, chair of the Combined Jewish Appeal and was a founding member of the Maimonides Lodge of B'nai Brith.

In the 1980s, he served as president of the Israel Bond Organization in Canada and as vice-chair of the board of Ben-Gurion University.

For the past seven years he has served as president of the Canada-Israel Committee, Quebec region. About three years ago, he lost in a bid to become national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee to Daniel Pekarsky of Vancouver.

Hecht serves on Congress' executive commitee and on the board of many other charitable organizations, both Jewish and non-Jewish.

* * *

In other Congress business, the national executive passed a motion urging the federal government to act on all 12 cases presented by the Justice Department to the Immigration Ministry. The resolution also called for criminal prosecution where evidence warranted and for the release of the names and crimes of all alleged Nazi war criminals.

Congress also resolved "to conduct a campaign to inform government leaders that continued delay to act appropriately against those who committed the most heinous crimes in the annals of history is unacceptable."

CJC to attend Quebec hearings

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The 4-year-old constitutional coalition of the Jewish, Greek and Italian communities announced on Feb. 3 that it will present a joint brief to the commission on the future of Quebec.

Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region has decided to alter its first position and appear before the provincial consultations on sovereignty.

But Congress continues to have "serious reservations" over the legitimacy of the process, said director Jack Jedwab.

"Any effort to use our submission to give credibility to the process will be addressed forcefully," Jedwab told The CJN.

"The bottom line is to ensure that Quebec remains in Canada."

A statement issued by the coalition said it still considers the commission process illegitimate "because it offers a singular vision of Quebec's future."

But it is taking part, the statement said, to reinforce "the federalist view in this debate of crucial importance for all Quebecers."

Jedwab said the decision to submit a brief was made after "consulation with numerous leaders," who concluded it was in the community's best interest to maintain a coalition common front.

Congress last week found itself under mounting pressure to participate, after the Hellenic Congress of Quebec voted by a narrow majority Jan. 31 to submit a brief, a move that led to media speculation that the coalition might crumble.

B'nai Brith Canada, Quebec region (BB), also announced last week it would take part, as it had originally indicated. The decision had been held in abeyance after it sparked critical reaction, and until BB received the backing of its lodges.

The move by the Greek community sparked an added controversy when Liberal MNA Christos Sirros charged that a community clique had engineered the Hellenic Congress' about-face, despite apparent widespread opposition by average members.

The Congress decision also came after internal Jewish community debate over participating, which grew after Liberal leader Daniel Johnson indicated his approval for federalists to appear.

One concern was that if B'nai Brith appeared and Congress did not, the impression would be left that the Jewish community could not maintain its own "common front" on the legitimacy of the process.

Canadian committee formed for Jerusalem 3000 party

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Former external affairs minister Barbara McDougall and Sen. Leo Kolber have agreed to serve as honorary chairs of the Canadian Committee for Jerusalem 3000, an international celebration of the 3,000th anniversary of King David making the city the capital of the Jewish people.

The event will be launched by the Israeli government in September 1995 at a gala show near the Western Wall, with the expected participation of world leaders and major artists, and then continue through 1996 with a full schedule of cultural, religious and academic activities.

The Canadian Committee, chaired by Neri Bloomfield of Montreal, is charged with organizing a Canadian presence during Jerusalem 3000, as well as parallel activities in Canada.

Bloomfield has just received confirmation that Le Don des Etoiles, a ballet and modern dance show featuring top Canadian and international performers held annually at Place des Arts to benefit sick children, will be presented in Jerusalem June 6, 1996. That show will be the centrepiece of a planned week-long Canadian salute to the City of David.

Distinguished advisors

The Canadian Committee, still in formation, includes a number of other distinguished people as advisers. Among them are opera singer Maureen Forrester, former McGill University law dean Maxwell Cohen, senators Ermine Cohen of Saint John, N.B., and Mira Spivak of Winnipeg, Israeli Ambassador to Canada Itzhak Shelef and Canadian Ambassador to Israel Norman Spector, and Sheila Finestone, Secretary of State for Multiculturalism.

All regions of Canada and every major Jewish organization are to be represented on the committee, said Bloomfield, and most are already.

While emphasizing the centrality of the city to Jews, Jerusalem 3000 will also acknowledge the importance of the city to Christians and Muslims. The event is subtitled Tribute to King David…Celebration for All Mankind.

One of the first conferences during the celebration will be the Pentecostal World Congress, in which 8,000 are expected to participate.

The Sept. 4 ceremony will begin with the official opening of the historic site of the City of David, which is undergoing extensive reconstruction, said Jerusalem 3000 director-general Yossi Tal-Gan, who was recently in Montreal.

That evening there will be a spectular sight and sound show above the Israel Museum site. Later that week, Daniel Barenboim will direct the Berlin Deutsche Staatsoper in a production of Beethoven's Fidelio at Sultan's Pool.

Tal-Gan, a seventh-generation Jerusalemite and Jerusalem's former city manager, is negotiating broadcast rights with U.S. television networks, which it is hoped will be a major source of funding.

"The purpose behind the celebrations is to both enhance the image of Jerusalem and strengthen support for Israel's position with regard to the city and to promote tourism, the economy and infrastructure," Tal-Gan said. This means getting the message across that Jerusalem must remain united and under Israeli sovereignty, and is a good place to invest or visit, he said.

Justice denied

If, God forbid, every man, woman and child on any street, of any neighborhood, of any community in Canada were murdered, and the murderers were known to the authorities, would Canadians not demand that they be brought to account? And if the numbers of people murdered filled all the homes on all the streets of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan, would Canadian justice hesitate to seek an accounting? And if 10 or 20 or even 50 years had passed since the people were murdered, would not Canadian conscience, let alone Canadian justice, still cry out?

Is it any wonder then, that Jewish leaders expressed disappointment and anger at the "war criminals policy" announced last week by the federal government? The government said it will seek the immediate deportation and denaturalization of four suspected World War II criminals. It will defer proceedings against eight others. And it will not likely ever prosecute the Nazis living among us.

It was not immediately clear why only four cases were being launched. At first, officials suggested that it was due to a lack of resources. Subsequently, the minister of justice explained that it was "to establish precedents...and to determine points of law that may help clear the way for the subsequent cases." With great respect to the ministers involved, the first explanation is shameful; the second explanation strains credibility. The law is clear and the procedures are well established, having been successfully invoked in 1992 against convicted war criminal Jacob Luitjens.

For at least a decade, since the work of the Deschenes Commission, community leaders have urged, coaxed, and pleaded with the federal government to act against the Nazis known to be in our midst. It has been a struggle for justice. But in the end, faced with seemingly endless and interminable political and legal battles, justice will have been denied.

The generation of World War II is fading away. The victims are passing on. The criminals, having aged gracefully in the sanctuary of Canadian justice, now sigh with smug relief. And in the hourglass of time, nearly filled to overflowing with heavy sand, the integrity of Canadian political will lies buried.

A dangerous attitude

In the New York Times last week, Youssef Ibrahim reported on a dispute between Muslim clerics concerning the theological legitimacy of making peace with Israel. Saudi Arabia's highest religious authority issued a religious edict in December affirming the right of Saudi rulers to attempt to normalize relations with Israel. The edict was immediately condemned however by Sheik Youssef el-Kardawi, described by Ibrahim as an influential Egyptian theologian. El-Kardawi's opposition was enough to cause the edict to be withdrawn.

That the opposition to such a tepid attempt at religious moderation was led by an Egyptian is troublesome. Unfortunately it is indicative of an attitude among extreme Muslim theologians which abhors coexistence.

These theologians, however, are not without power. They hold sway over a large portion of the masses. This undoubtedly explains, in part, the recent shift by the Mubarak government, commented upon in this issue, away from fuller, better relations with Israel. They must be carefully watched for their possible malign effect on peaceful relations among the nations of the region.

If we only but dare

Henrietta Szold was almost 50 years old when she first visited Palestine in the autumn of 1909. Some 10 years later, on Feb. 21, 1920, the Zionist torch fully ablaze within her soul, she again departed for the Holy Land, there to remain except for brief periods, until her death on Feb. 13, 1945.

She was a truly remarkable woman. One of her biographers noted that under her leadership there arose in the burgeoning Jewish state infant welfare centres, hospitals, clinics, a nurses' training school, playgrounds, school lunch and hygiene programs. She organized the social welfare system, health and education activities and youth aliyah, which in her lifetime, rescued more than 13,000 children from Nazi Europe.

Henrietta Szold proved that when aimed at perfecting the world, the human soul soars in partnership with the Divine.

She proved that individuals can make a difference. If we only but dare.

Volunteers available to prosecute war criminals

You report in "Cost no factor in war crimes cases," Jan. 19, that Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi appears to be backtracking on a statement that he thought legal action against Nazi war criminals was too expensive. So what else is new? Since the enabling legislation was passed, each minister with any responsibility to deal with Nazi war criminals in Canada has postured, promised, studied and then in essence done nothing.

Justice Minister Allan Rock, relying on the strange decision of the majority of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Finta case, has now abandoned prosecuting Nazi war criminals. The Supreme Court of Canada in reaching its conclusions ignored the precedent of the Nuremberg Nazi war crimes trials and found that Finta was able to rely on the absurd defence that he was only following orders. It has perhaps not occurred to Mr. Rock that that defence may not be available to the other 20 or more suspected Nazi war criminals who were found to be present in Canada by the Deschenes Commission. Mr. Rock's reasoning would be analogous to a court finding that a man accused of rape was acquitted because it was found that the victim had consented and that on that basis no further rape charges should be laid in any other rape case.

If the decision is now to proceed with denaturalization and deportation, then we must look to the Minister of Immigration for action.

If it turns out that indeed there are no funds to proceed to trial, notwithstanding that $50 million has been expended to date, then I have a suggestion for the minister.

My organization is made up of hundreds of lawyers and I am confident that we could provide volunteers who — at no cost to the government or the citizens of Canada — would take the briefs and proceed with the prosecutions. I challenge the ministers of justice and immigration to respond and to once and for all stop with their pat political responses that the matter is still being studied.

To set the human heart free of hatred

I received this letter in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz. Please share it with your readers. Bernie Farber.

I observed the anniversary in my own way, reflecting on many thoughts and feelings. I wondered at the slow progress of men's hearts to be opened, of the amnesia that afflicts so many of us, the need for excuses and revisionism, the vulgar politicizing of horror.

I also thought a lot of your father, Bernie, of the stories you told me about a family never known. I could not dare to understand the full meaning of your loss, but I held my child tightly last night and talked gently about love. I sent my prayers to God and recommitted myself to the work of vigilance and remembering.

It is of pressing importance that we not consign the dead to some vague, gauzy generalization. We must remember the names, the faces, the personal details, the very sound of children's laughter, silenced individual by individual. We must remember that it was Jews who were singled out for murder by man-made machines and hatred. By remembering the innocent, specifically for their Jewishness, traditions and faith, we remember the humanity we all share. The "Other" becomes us, Jew and non-Jew, because we know in our souls that the nature of being human is God given and exact ...

Long life my friend. May you live to see the human heart grow free of its hurt and hate.

Don't put income ceiling on reparations

I am writing this letter in protest regarding the monies that are to be paid by Germany to survivors of the concentration camps. According to the Claim Conference Article Fund, people who have an annual income of $25,000 are not entitled to receive any form of compensation.

What does it matter what your annual income is today? Surely any persons who went through such hardship and suffering in the camps during the war should be entitled to compensation, regardless of what their income is today.

In fact, no amount of money will ever make up for the indignities and human suffering that I and thousands of other people have gone through and will never be able to forget.

Auschwitz anniversary deserved more notice

I ask why no major event seems to have been planned on the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz and no articles or editorials preceded the Jan. 26, CJN issue. In Israel, commemorative events were held last week. (The forced death marches began on Jan. 16.) What excuses and rationalization can be given for our community's delay and default?

Our leadership and "machers" are constantly busy organizing major and minor events. They are always on the lookout for high profile programs and/or high profile speakers. The least emphasis seems to be put on actually reaching a reasonable portion of the community to take part in their often excellently planned gatherings. Isn't it time to re-establish priorities?

Terrorist threat is worldwide

Islamic fundamentalist terror is not a "Zionist state" problem.

The bombing of the Jewish Centre in Buenos Aires in the summer of 1994, which claimed the life of close to 100 people, demonstrated that terrorists don't discriminate between "Zionists" and Jews.

Nor is it a Jewish problem. The bombing of the World Trade Centre in December 1993 demonstrated that the western world is as much a target of Islamic fundamentalist terror as any bus in Tel Aviv.

It is an international problem. When will the world deal with it as such?

Henrietta Szold — she made a difference

BY AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

At an age when most people let the dust settle under their feet, Henrietta Szold was up to her ankles in the rich mud of Palestine.

Szold, who had fallen in love with the Jewish Homeland on her first visit in 1909, returned 11 years later at the age of 60 to oversee the much-needed medical work being undertaken by Hadassah, the Jewish women's organization she founded in 1912.

Up and down the country, "from Dan to Beersheva" as she liked to say, Szold visited Jewish colonies and Arab villages alike to ensure their basic medical needs were being met. As in later travels around the country, she would often return to her Jerusalem home covered in mud.

"After four days spent in Haifa, Ain Harod and Kfar Giladi, [it] took me 2½ hours to remove the mud from my shoes, my overshoes, my coat, my dress, my unders," she wrote after greeting the first Youth Aliyah arrivals from Germany in February 1934. "Such depths of mud as I trudged through: I was dragging with me a mountain of earth."

No doubt it was dirty work. Typhus, cholera, dysentery and malaria were rampant. Szold saw Jewish children blinded by trachoma, and visited colonies where 150 families shared one open toilet. Their Arab neighbors had even less.

Little in her first 60 years signalled that Henrietta Szold would become one of the pre-eminent woman Zionists of her time.

Born Dec. 21, 1860, in Baltimore, she was the eldest of five daughters of Rabbi Benjamin Szold and his wife Sophie Schaar Szold. She grew up speaking German, studying Jewish texts with her father and absorbing the family values of Ordnung and Menschenliebe.

She was a teacher, journalist and translator of books. She started an English night school for Russian Jewish immigrants in 1889, and turned down numerous marriage proposals because she was happiest tatting wool and assisting her beloved father.

After her father's death in 1902, Henrietta and her mother moved to New York for her to enrol in the newly-opened Jewish Theological Seminary. She was the only female student, a tiny woman in her mid-40s bristling with the determination to edit her father's works. Instead, she met Prof. Louis Ginzberg and fell in love. The four-year friendship ended in disappointment when the younger man, despite all indications he would marry her, instead became engaged to another.

Henrietta Szold was devastated. No longer content with her spinster's life, she had hoped to find fulfilment as a Jewish wife. To help her heal, her mother took her on an extended vacation to Europe and Palestine, and there, in the hardscrabble Jewish colonies, she found new hope for fulfilment.

With her sprightly mother, Henrietta toured the colonies on the back of a mule-drawn wagon. In places like Sejera, Yemina, Mesha, Athlit, Nesly, Tiberias, Haderah, Petach Tikvah and Rehovot they saw endemic malaria and sub-standard nutrition. She returned to America fired up with the need to provide the Yishuv, the Jewish people in Palestine, with basic medical care.

And she did. At 50, she taught herself about X-ray machines and wrote hygiene pamphlets in Hebrew. Through Hadassah, she sent two nurses to Palestine and later organized the American Zionist Medical Unit, which disembarked in 1918 with 44 doctors, dentists, nurses, sanitary engineers, administrators and 400 tons of equipment.

But there were problems, and in 1920 she went to Palestine to solve them. Her two-year posting lasted until her death in 1945 at age 84.

She oversaw five hospitals, a nurses' training school and dozens of health clinics. It was a constant battle against shrinking budgets and growing health demands. "The immigration medical work was thrust upon Hadassah [by the World Zionist Organization] but those who flung it at us forgot to throw the appropriation with it," she wrote bitterly.

In spite of her age, Henrietta Szold took on all challenges, attributing her stamina to her observance of the Sabbath and her "cast-iron stomach."

Dancing with "her" rescued children.

After being nominated in 1931 to the quasi-governmental Vaad Leumi, the 70-year-old whipped Palestine's 445 charitable and governmental agencies into a cohesive department of health and social services.

Still, she was tired and planned to return to the United States. In 1933, she was already packed when Recha Freier of Berlin proposed that German youth between 15 and 17 be resettled in Palestine because of growing anti-Semitism.

The project, called Youth Aliyah, found a place in Henrietta Szold's heart. She travelled all of Palestine to find colonies willing to house and train the German youth for two-year periods. She visited Germany three times between 1933 and 1937 to drum up candidates, speaking in public despite Gestapo spies. The first group of 63 girls and boys arrived when she was 73: they were her first "children." Within four years, 2,330 more came.

At 78 Henrietta Szold cut her working hours from 18 to 12 per day. She spent the war years planning public services, medical treatment and food supplies in the event of a German occupation, and died in Hadassah-Rothschild Hospital on Feb. 13, 1945.

By FRANCES KRAFT

Batia Feingold, who was brought to Palestine from Germany at the age of 17 as a Youth Aliya child, had the unique privilege six years later of serving as nurse to the woman who spearheaded the organization responsible for her own rescue.

Feingold, who now lives in Pittsburgh, remembers Henrietta Szold as "one of the most cultured, intelligent and humane women" she has ever met.

Szold, in turn, took great pride during the months before her death in telling her many distinguished visitors that her day nurse was a product of Youth Aliyah, Feingold recalls.

Ziva Fichman of Toronto is also a living beneficiary of Youth Aliyah. Originally established to rescue Jewish youngsters from Nazi Germany, Youth Aliyah also served children born in Palestine.

Fichman was one of those children. In 1938, at the age of 6, she entered Ben Shemen Youth Aliyah village near Lod, following her parents' divorce.

The former elementary school teacher remembers her education during the nine years she spent there as being imbued with "dignity and integrity."

Fichman recalls a 1940 visit by Szold to the village. "You couldn't avoid noticing her and feeling that there was something very special about her."

Although she was barely taller than many of the Youth Aliyah children, her impact was enormous and reverberates to this day. In its first four years, Youth Aliyah brought over 2,300 children to Palestine.

"It is inspiring but at the same time a little sad that 50 years later, we still need to give [children] the security and the education they need for their future," says Judy Mandleman, Vancouver-based president of the Canadian arm of Hadassah, the women's Zionist organization founded by Szold in New York in 1912 to provide modern health care in Palestine. Hadassah continues to support both Youth Aliyah and the Hadassah Medical Organization, which operates two major medical centres in Jerusalem.

"[Szold] could stir up people," says Montrealer Eva Chait, 90. As a child of 11, Chait was in the kitchen washing dishes at her aunt's home in Toronto while a group of Jewish women — soon to become the first Canadian Hadassah chapter — gathered to hear Szold speak of her work in Palestine.

"Henrietta Szold was a very tiny person, but she had very piercing eyes," recalls Chait, who also heard her speak publicly in later years. "You were involved immediately in anything she was saying."

"She made great demands of others. I don't think she could have achieved half of what she did if she hadn't been this way," says Gabi Hermel, who, like Feingold, was one of Szold's nurses in the last six months of her life. "She was a special personality, at times difficult, but ultimately a great woman," said Hermel from her home in Jerusalem.

In her own words

"I became converted to Zionism the very moment I realized that it supplied my bruised, torn and bloody nation, my distracted nation, with an ideal: an ideal that is balm to the self-inflicted wounds and to the wounds inflicted by others; an ideal that can be embraced by all, no matter what their attitude may be to other Jewish questions."

"The greatest art of all is the art of living, and the best preparation for the art of living is the cultivated heart. The cultivated heart is in the human being who knows and appreciates our heritage and our history; who can absorb and understand and translate this understanding into action in the present and also action for tomorrow."

Why Auschwitz wasn't bombed

Fifty years ago this week the Russians reached Auschwitz, ending the years of indescribable horror that had marked this infamous place. The SS had driven the prisoners away on their westward march, a journey that claimed thousands of additional lives. What remained behind, in addition to a remnant of prisoners, was the complex of gas chambers, barracks, administration headquarters and the like, and of course, the famous rail yards.

By Rabbi Gunther Plaut

Ever since the Auschwitz story became part of the world's consciousness, a nagging question has been raised time and again: Why didn't the Allies bomb the rail yards?

After all, in the fall of 1944 the Allies bombed Monowitz, a synthetic oil plant which lay only four kilometres east of the Auschwitz compound and less than eight km from the Auschwitz-Birkenau gas chambers. True, the mission ran into anti-aircraft fire and the bombers inflicted only slight damage on the factory. Some bombs did fall on Auschwitz itself, hitting a clothing workshop (in which 40 people were killed), and also destroyed SS barracks killing 15 and injuring 28. Notwithstanding this failure, it has been accepted wisdom that a straightforward assault on Auschwitz would have saved hundreds of thousands of lives.

But a book by Richard H. Levy, The Bombing of Auschwitz Revisited — A Clinical Analysis, condemns most previous writings on the subject and says: "The treatment of the operational aspects of this affair by so-called historians of the Holocaust is pathetic. Many of them leap to the conclusion that the bombing could easily have been done, and then jump straight from this to the view that the failure to do it was politically motivated."

Questions raised

The Jan. 12 issue of the Jerusalem Report makes the Levy book and the questions it raises its cover story. I have, of course, no way of assessing the accuracy of Levy's analysis. He is, however, supported by Irving Uttal, a retired U.S. Air Force lieutenant-colonel who himself participated in bombing missions over Nazi targets in World War II, and who has arrived at the same conclusions. Both writers argue that today's technology in bombing from great heights can in no way be compared with the great inaccuracy of bombing that existed during World War II. According to Uttal, heavy bombers "only hit their bulls-eyes three per cent of the time."

He also denies the oft-made claim that the Allies had total control of the skies. He cites an October 1944 bombing raid on the Merseberg oil plant (in which 400 Nazi fighter planes attacked the Allies' bombing force and shot down 26 planes) and points out that the Monowitz oil plant was defended by 79 heavy guns. He also quotes another researcher on the Allied bombing attack on the ball-bearing centre at Schweinfurt. The first assault didn't do much damage, and when the Allies attacked again, almost 100 bombers were lost.

The Allied governments claimed all along that nothing should be done to divert them from the main goal, namely, the defeat of the Nazis, which alone would guarantee freedom for all the oppressed. Therefore the Allies never parachuted food to millions of Soviet troops starving to death in Nazi PoW camps, nor did they attempt to aid U.S. and British servicemen in Japanese PoW camps. For better or for worse, the Allies made no exception to the rule that "all humanitarian diversion objectives were subordinated to military needs."

There were also, even at that time, significant Jewish figures who opposed a bombing of Auschwitz. For instance, Leon Kubowitzki, head of the Rescue Department of the World Jewish Congress, publicly opposed the suggestion and wrote to the U.S. Government War Refugee Board that in such a bombing "the first victims would be the Jews," and that an Allied air assault could serve as "a welcome pretext for the Germans to assert that their Jewish victims had been massacred not by their killers, but by Allied bombers."

The author of the Jerusalem Report article, David Horovitz, concludes his piece by saying:

"It's easy, from the armchair of history, to point accusatory fingers of blame, to talk of anti-Semitism, to deride a single-minded Allied commitment to the speediest possible crushing of the German war machine. Fifty years later, asks Uttal, isn't it time to end the slander?"

Since Jan. 27 has been widely observed as the liberation day of Auschwitz, the old controversy will undoubtedly be revived.

Shmoozing cures the blues

The Jewish people, who are so few in number, have, throughout the course of history, contributed much in advancing civilization — writing the law, defining a code of ethics, promoting social issues and developing the arts and sciences. Jews have also been most prominent in the field of health care, having given the world chicken soup and shmoozing. What chicken soup is to physical well being, shmoozing is to emotional well being, often referred to as chicken soup for the psyche.

By Jack Chisvin

With their wonderful wisdom, Jewish mothers have long known the healing power of chicken soup. They also intuitively knew the benefit of shmoozing. When my mother sensed that one of her children was troubled, she lovingly embraced the child and said, in Yiddish of course (it loses something in translation), "Let's talk it out — it will lighten the load on your heart."

Therapeutic value

Freud was the first to formally exploit the therapeutic value of shmoozing in treating his patients. In deference to the scientific world, he called it analysis therapy. Shmoozing cures depression, it reduces stress, it induces sleep, it is invigorating and rejuvenating, it has no unpleasant side effects, it is non-addictive and it does not have to be prescribed by a doctor. It is a natural, organic, perfect self-administered home remedy.

A shmooz can be a friendly, gossipy, aimless talk — a prolonged mindless conversation. Shmoozing can be sharing ideas and thoughts, sometimes intimate, sometimes light-hearted, but never nonsensical. You can shmooz over the telephone, but the best shmooz takes place to face across a table or in a quiet corner of a room. A shmooz is not a debate or an argument, and it is not ever adversarial. Shmoozing takes time. A shmooz ideally involves only two people and the best shmoozer is a close friend or a family member.

There are occasions when you can shmooz with a stranger, such as a fellow passenger on a long airplane flight. It usually starts with the question "Aren't you —"?

To enjoy a shmooz you must be able to listen as well as to talk. When I am alone in a restaurant or find myself in a crowd of strangers without anyone with whom to shmooz, I do a half-shmooz by merely listening to people. I do not put them under surveillance or eavesdrop on an entire conversation. I try to catch a fleeting remark, a fragment of dialogue, and then let it flutter around in my imagination. People unaware that they can be overheard say the most absurd and memorable things.

This kind of phrase-grabbing is almost as rewarding as a good shmooz. One of Homer's well known cliches is "winged words." Phrases taken out of context are winged words. To paraphrase the immortal Mohammed Ali, they "float like a butterfly but can sting like a bee." It is fun to try to snag them as they fly by, but you must be careful not to get stung. Now speaking about butterflies and bees while suffering from the February blues syndrome is the right stuff for a shmooz. Try it — shmoozing will make you feel good.

Mideast leaders seek new start

No society is immune to the ravages of terrorism and no terrorism is as nerve-racking as the mad Islamic brand, which sends its fanaticized youngsters to die as they kill in the name of God. Leaders do not give in to terrorism, however ghastly, but under its impact, they are often rushed to hasty reactions.

By Yechiyahu Anav

For reasons frequently discussed in this column, the peace process, which many Israelis fear and Islamic fundamentalists abhor as much as they hate the Jews, was doing badly even before the two suicide-bombers took the lives of 20 Israelis at Beit-Lid.

But not until the recent savagery could the planners of death savor the sweet taste of success. Israeli TV repeated the cruel images of the carnage endlessly and portrayed a confused government on the defensive against the accusations of the opposition that its peace policies were responsible for the tragedy.

The besieged leadership reiterated its commitment to pursue Islamic terrorism more vigorously than ever, but also to continue the peace efforts in spite of adversity. Yet the measures proclaimed and taken, did not help the peace process at all. The government was, in effect, just bowing to the public's demand for revenge.

The closure of Greenline Israel to Palestinians from the territories is no defence against those for whom death in action does not constitute a deterrent. Thus the measure (taken many times before) was perceived by the Arab masses as indiscriminate collective punishment.

Frustration mounted and played into the hands of the extremists, undermining whatever is left of the authority of the PLO, which is blamed for negotiating with the implacable enemy.

A new term, "separation," has been added by the government to the current political vocabulary. The Palestinians and the Israelis should not intermingle. Asked to elaborate the details, the government proposed to study the matter throughly. Separation makes much sense. In fact, in the long run it is the only possible solution, but for now it is just a slogan.

Enlarge settlements

Meanwhile, activist leaders of the settlers' communities used the official confusion and attempted to enlarge some settlements beyond the modest requirements of natural growth. This forced the government to take counter-measures for which it is not politically ready. Thus, the already entangled topography of the territories, where autonomy should replace Israeli rule, and whose final status is still to be negotiated, could get even more complicated.

If, as it now stands, Yitzhak Rabin's government cannot cope with all the intricacies of the situation, sooner or later a Likud-led government may take its place. Good news for the Jewish opponents of the peace process? Not necessarily. It is one thing to try and bring down a government, another to act when in power.

Some observers now believe that if the second Rabin government follows the destiny of the first (1974-1977) and disintegrates or loses the next elections, history will repeat itself and a Likud-led government will be forced to make painful concessions to the Arabs in order to reach a solution. This sounds surprising but should not be dismissed out of hand. Did not Menachem Begin do what his Labor predecessors did not dare to try? Did he not, with Ariel Sharon's active help, dismantle the Sinai settlements?

But this possibility, though perhaps not all that remote, is still not so close. Right now, Rabin is once more trying to lure the wavering Shas party back into his narrow coalition. If he succeeds, his majority in the Knesset will be a little more comfortable than the present one, but still open to the surprises for which Shas has become notorious in its short existence. If Shas prefers to sit on the fence, or even join the opposition because this may seem electorally preferable to its rabbinical mentors, Rabin may try to reshuffle his government to paper over the cracks that have weakened it so much recently and to give his team a better image.

But the problem is not image, not even power, but the use one makes of it. A restructured government will either have to pursue the peace process more vigorously, or continue to slow it down and face all the regional and international repercussions. Or it may do neither. This would be its worst option, since this will leave the scene to the manipulations of the extremists on both sides.

Germans seek atonement in Israel

Reporting from Tel Aviv, Sheldon Kirshner describes a program in which young German nationals do penance in Israel.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

The Holocaust has had a profound effect on Tino Fleischer, Thomas Stamm and Andrea Insinger.

Due to this indelible stain on German history, they have volunteered 18 months of their lives to Israel and the Jewish people.

They are members of a German social action organization called Aktion Suhnezeichen, or Operation Sign of Atonement, which marks its 37th anniversary this year.

The volunteers of Aktion Suhnezeichen are found in countries which were either occupied — and brutalized — by Nazi Germany, or whose citizens suffered at the hands of the Nazi juggernaut.

They work with the sick, the infirm, the handicapped and the elderly and, more often than not, with Holocaust survivors.

There are 24 such volunteers in Israel.

The volunteers I met one night at their modest flat in Yad Eliahu, a working-class neighborhood of Tel Aviv, are in their early 20s. Tino, 21, is from Bremen. Thomas, 20, is a native of Wurzburg. Andrea, 24, hails from the Hannover area.

Andrea works in an Orthodox chronic care hospital, Thomas in a school for handicapped children, and Tino in a senior citizens' home.

All three were fascinated by Germany's descent into barbarity, interested in Jewish history and drawn to Israel. Above all, they wanted to do something practical to show their solidarity with the Jewish people and Israel.

In Tino's and Thomas' case, there was yet another consideration. Membership in Aktion Suhnezeichen gives them, as conscientious objectors, immunity from the draft in Germany.

Tino, Thomas and Andrea do not see themselves as "typical" post-war Germans, if only because they are on the left politically. And they point out that their motives for joining were not universally understood by their families and friends.

Thomas' parents, whom he describes as conservatives, didn't grasp why he masochistically sought to confront a chapter in German nationalism they consider closed. "My father was really against it," he said.

Volunteers want to show solidarity with Jewish people

Andrea, whose late grandfather was a Nazi and SS recruit, discovered that her mother was supportive while her father was less than keen. Both, however, feared for her safety in Israel.

Tino, whose grandfather was an SS man, also encountered some resistance from his parents, who were concerned about his security. But many of his friends and teachers were sympathetic.

In preparation for Aktion Suhnezeichen, the threesome attended a two-month seminar about Israel, studied Hebrew (they have mastered simple conversational Hebrew) and visited Auschwitz.

Each volunteer is backed by at least 10 sponsors in Germany whose stipends enable them and others to meet their day-to-day expenses.

They're glad to be in Israel.

"You can ease the pain a little," said Tino, who often works with survivors, and who was a member of an anti-fascist group at home. "I hear from a lot of the people, 'It's good you're here.' "

Apart from his usual duties, Thomas visits old German Jews, walking and shopping with them. "Some long for people like us. For them, it's a reconciliation with the past, though you can never change it. I can learn a lot from them. I've learned to be more critical of German society, of Germany's lack of openness with regard to immigrants."

Visited Auschwitz concentration camp as part of program

Andrea has developed a greater sensitivity toward minorities, plumbed the depths of Middle East politics and come to appreciate the solidarity displayed by Jewish Israelis in a crisis situation (such as the kidnapping and murder of the soldier Nachshon Wachsman by Hamas last autumn).

Andrea has not run into anti-German sentiment and, indeed, has been invited to Shabbat dinners. But like most foreigners, she has not made friends with Israelis of her generation.

Sometimes, in the company of survivors, she feels twinges of guilt. She never raises the Holocaust in conversations, though she is perfectly willing to discuss it when the topic is broached. When she is asked about neo-Nazism in Germany, she fears she won't have the "right" answers.

Whenever Thomas meets someone new, he feels nervous about his German nationality. "I feel that I'm carrying a burden on my shoulders, and that I have to act very responsibly."

Furthermore, when he watched a World Cup soccer game in a pub last summer, he felt he couldn't openly cheer for the German team.

Tino believes that, despite Israel's excellent bilateral relations with Germany, Israelis tend to be negatively disposed toward his nation. German right-wing radicalism casts a giant shadow and, as he put it, "It always seems that the past comes up in conversations."

Their impressions of Israel vary.

"I thought Israel would be a poorer country, and a dangerous one," Andrea observed. "Yet Israel is very modern and European in many respects. I was a little afraid after the suicide bombing in Tel Aviv last October, but now I'm not scared. I know something can happen, but I don't think about it constantly."

Tino had no preconceptions, but now he regards Israel as "a very special country." Nevertheless, Israelis are in need of consciousness raising insofar as the environment is concerned.

At first, Thomas couldn't cope with the run-of-the-mill brusqueness of Israelis. Today, in a volte-face, he views Israelis as direct and open. "The longer I'm here, the more I admire these qualities. And I really admire what Israelis have achieved here."

Thomas had "problems" with the way the Israeli army responded to the Palestinian revolt in the territories (the intifadah). Now, with the uprising over, he marvels at Israel's courage in trying to achieve peace with its Arab neighbors.

Tino is engaged in a ceaseless effort to try to comprehend the roots of the Holocaust. "You can never understand why Auschwitz happened. Auschwitz is so unbelievable."

For their part, Thomas and Andrea believe that the Holocaust could have been conceived only in Germany, with its long anti-Semitic tradition.

And Andrea is still shocked that so many Germans were indifferent to the persecution of Jews.

Not surprisingly, they are concerned by the rise of neo-Nazi violence in Germany. Thomas suspects that German police forces are rife with neo-Nazi sympathizers. He's disappointed that the German government passed legislation which restricts the right of refugees to asylum.

Andrea thinks that radical right-wing demonstrations should be banned. Tino contends that far rightists are encouraged by "an unfriendly attitude toward strangers." He added, "A spirit of prejudice exists against foreigners."

All three, however, have faith in German democracy. Be that as it may, Thomas is puzzled, and worried, by the upsurge of anti-Semitism on German soil. "You can't find rational reasons for it. Germans ask, 'Why do Jews in Germany have so much money? And why are they so influential?' "

Germans of their generation, they acknowledge, are weary of being reminded of the Holocaust. But, they concur, they are morally bound to remember this dark episode and to cultivate special relations with Israel.

"We, the German people," said Andrea, "have a responsibility to the past."

Mideast Analysis

Israel's challenge in Lebanon

While Israel has redoubled its efforts to strike crippling blows at Hamas and Islamic Jihad in the West Bank, it faces a similar, if not more daunting, challenge from Islamic fundamentalism in southern Lebanon.

There, amid the rough terrain of a country struggling to put itself back together after a long civil war, Israel has established a security zone to protect its northern border.

The 440-square-mile enclave, which runs from the Mediterranean Sea to the foothills of Mt. Hermon, is patrolled by about 1,000 Israeli soldiers and several thousand members of the mainly Shi'ite, Israeli-trained and financed South Lebanon Army (SLA).

Israel established the zone in all but name in the mid-1970s, following an upsurge of Palestinian guerrilla activity. When Israel withdrew from Lebanon in 1985, three years after its invasion, it carved out an official sphere of influence in southern Lebanon.

The majority of the Shi'ite Muslims never accepted Israel's presence, and in the past decade, Israel has been engaged in a mini-war to protect its position there.

Israel's chief adversary is Hezbollah (Party of God), a Shi'ite force supported by Syria and Iran. But a variety of Palestinian groups, all opposed to the current Middle East peace process, have also joined the fighting.

The battles have waxed and waned, but rarely a day goes by without tension. In 1994, 21 Israeli soldiers and many more SLA fighters were killed while on duty in southern Lebanon. In the same period, the Israeli Air Force carried out about 30 raids against Hezbollah and Palestinian bases north of the security zone.

Hezbollah has always been a formidable enemy, but in the past year there has been a marked improvement in its ability to inflict pain on the Israeli army and the SLA. Furthermore, Hezbollah has acquired more effective weapons, including long-range mortars and Sagar rockets.

Nevertheless, Israel has rejected the idea of expanding the zone, knowing this would only exacerbate its problems. And Israel has ruled out the possibility of attacking Hezbollah more ferociously, realizing that such operations could prompt Hezbollah to shell civilians in the Galilee.

Through the United States, Israel has asked Syria to restrain Hezbollah, but to no avail. Syria regards Hezbollah as a useful lever. The Syrians, the dominant power in Lebanon, demand a full Israeli withdrawal from the security zone, not to mention the Golan Heights.

The Lebanese government has promised to stop attacks against Israel if it leaves the zone over a six month period. Israel proposes to evacuate it over nine months, provided the Lebanese army disarms Hezbollah beforehand.

Whatever happens, no one doubts that the road to peace with Lebanon passes through Damascus. Southern Lebanon will remain turbulent at least until Syria and Israel can resolve their seemingly intractable differences over the Golan Heights.

By RABBI AARON LEVINE

I walked into the staff room of our school a couple of weeks ago and found the rabbis engaged in a heated discussion. A student had just asked his Rebbe (teacher) the following shaile (question): "Rebbe, if I answer the phone, and Mr. X asks to speak to my father, and my father tells me to tell him that he's not home, am I allowed to lie and say to Mr. X that my father is not home, when I know that he really is home? Isn't that going against the Torah's command of, midvar sheker tirchak, you should keep far away from telling a lie?"

To answer this question, with all of the possible halachic ramifications, such as the possibility that obeying one's father would supercede the transgression of the lie; one is allowed to lie to keep the peace, and therefore to keep peace with one's own father might fit into this category, etc. is beyond the scope of our discussion. Suffice it is to say, the probable correct answer to the question is a simple, "No, You may not lie. A father cannot command a child to transgress a law of the Torah!" However, in order not to contradict a father in a chuzpedige (audacious) way, one has to teach the child how he should respond to the request in an appropriate manner satisfying the command not to lie, and at the same time satisfying the command of showing respect to one's parents.

But that set me thinking about "role models" — how prevalent it is that we chastise our children for lying, and rightly so, and yet we model the above behavior and tell our children to outrightly lie by telling a caller, "Sorry, my father is not home."

We tell our children that speaking evil about their friends is a no no — it's loshen hora, forbidden speech. But yet they sit at the dinner table and we unabashedly tell our spouses the daily loshon hora rag sheet.

We tell our children how important it is to learn Torah and that bittul Torah (wasting time from Torah study) is the greatest sin of all. And then we come home, albeit tired from the daily hassle of making a living, and we frit away precious hours reading the newspaper cover to cover and watching the addictive tube, the sacred TV.

We want our children to go to shul every day for all three minyanim, even on Sunday, and we take the liberty of relaxing once a week on a Sunday morning and perhaps make the later minyan, and perhaps not.

We want to inculcate in our children the virtue of honesty. Honesty is not only the best policy, it is the only policy. But then we cross the border with all sorts of merchandise that should be declared and respond to the query, "How much do you have to declare?" with a resounding, "Oh, about $75 US worth," when we've got several times that amount. And of course before we get to the border we command our children, "Now, not a single sound, don't breathe till we're past the booth," so that we can hear the "honest" response Dad gives the custom's officer.

"You're never supposed to get angry," we yell at our kids when they are screaming at one another. "Do you ever hear me get angry with your mother? Never, right?"

"You must always be appreciative of everything we do for you. Don't you hear me thank Mommy every night for preparing such a wonderful supper?"

"Honor and respect to parents is the fifth commandment, don't you know that yet?" And when Bubbie calls to ask if you, her son, can just do her a small favor and drive her to the supermarket, we tell Bubbie's grandchild to tell her, "Sorry, Bubbie, Dad can't go right now, he's in the middle of watching the Superbowl."

We can go on and on, with countless examples. The famous expression goes, "Middos (good character traits) are caught not taught." We can no longer get away with the command, "Do as I say, not as I do."

If we want to sincerely transmit to the next generation all of the middos tovos (good traits) and observance of Torah and mitzvot, we have to be live role models and set good examples for our children to emulate

And as far as the first question is concerned, remember the following two famous quotes: "There is no such thing as a white lie; a lie is as black as a coal pit, and twice as foul." (Henry Ward Beecher). "Those who think it is permissible to tell white lies soon become color-blind." (Austin O'Malley). Good Shabbos!

Kolel draws 350 to learn about death and afterlife

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Over 350 people turned out last month to learn about the Jewish view of death and the afterlife at a week-long series of seminars offered by Kolel: A Centre for Liberal Jewish Learning.

The five seminars, which addressed mourning rituals, reincarnation, euthanasia and ethical wills, drew record crowds, said Kolel director Rabbi Elyse Goldstein.

Kolel's week-long "mini-course" has explored timely issues for the past four winters.

"People want to know about the meaning of life in the face of death, and facing death both spiritually and practically," Rabbi Goldstein said of the Beyond the Beyond January course.

Participant Jay Howpt, a free-lance film editor raised in a Conservative home, told The CJN the most recent course, his first, "was on a subject that appealed to me, which is what happens to people when they die."

Howpt, an unaffiliated Jew, is planning to explore the topic further through a lecture series offered by three Toronto Conservative synagogues.

Rabbi Goldstein said like all Kolel activities, half the course participants came from "liberal" congregations, 40 per cent were unaffiliated, with the remaining 10 per cent identifying themselves as modern Orthodox.

Chassidic leader set to visit

TORONTO — Rabbi Tanchum Becker, leader of the chassidic dynasty of Ozerov Chencin, will be visiting Toronto from Feb. 17 to 20.

He is stopping here as part of a trip to the United States on behalf of Kollel Esh Dat, an institute of higher Torah learning in Tel Aviv.

Rabbi Becker will be staying with his in-laws, Rabbi and Rebbetzen Moses Burak, at 29 Coreydale Court in Downsview.

For an appointment to see the rabbi, telephone 636-1945.

To celebrate victory in Europe

By RABBI ERWIN SCHILD

The brochure in my hands announces the Community Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of Liberation and Holocaust Remembrance on April 30 to May 1, sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, and the Holocaust remembrance commitee of our Jewish Federation.

GUEST VOICES

Why do I feel ill at ease looking at the two-day program? Why do I not sign up for the event right away? Am I not a fervent advocate of Holocaust remembrance? Having lived for six years in Nazi Germany and having been a teenage prisoner in Dachau, I bear the Holocaust constantly in my mind and never stop thinking about my parents and childhood friends who perished. I am often angry because so many people take no notice of the annual Holocaust Remembrance Day.

And suddenly I know why.

It is a program by survivors for survivors and their descendants.

It is an excellent and rich program for a conference on the Holocaust, close to Yom Hashoah, the Holocaust Remembrance Day on the 27th of Nissan, which falls this year on April 27. I intend to observe Yom Hashoah as always, but this year my mind is focused on a different anniversary.

I want to celebrate with my fellow Jews the 50th anniversary of the Allied victory over Nazi Germany, on or close to the date of Germany's unconditional surrender, which took place on May 8, 1945. VE-Day we called it: Victory in Europe. Its anniversary should not be turned into an extended Yom Hashoah.

VE-Day was an unforgettable experience for the Allied nations, for all Canadians and especially for Jews. For nearly five years we had lived through the most terrible war. We had tasted bitter defeat and choked on the ashen dust of despair, as the seemingly invincible German war machine rolled with deadly efficiency from conquest to conquest. Germany and Japan seemed to be headed for global victory.

VE-Day meant liberation for the Holocaust survivors. It also brought the grim revelation of the full extent of the Holocaust. There was no time for prolonged rejoicing in our victory, in view of the human cost of the military operations and the horrible statistics of genocide against the Jews. The struggle against Japan still had to continue to its apocalyptic conclusion ... Yet that one day of thanksgiving and joyful triumph still reverberates in the minds of those who were there.

The Canadian Jewish community owes much of its present strength and vitality to the Holocaust survivors who eventually built a new home in our midst. However, not all Canadian Jews are Holocaust survivors or children and grandchildren of survivors. Those who are not honor and love all those who came to us after they had endured the war years under German rule and we respect the special burdens of memory borne by their descendants.

But the majority of Canadian Jews lived through the war on the Allied side or were born to those who did. Their need is to celebrate the 50th anniversary of VE-Day, not only with their fellow Canadians, but also with those who share the unique Jewish nuances of recalling this event. Victory was the triumph of freedom and human goodness.

TORONTO —There was no sudden stroke of lightning or moment of revelation that brought Rabbi Yaacov Asher Sinclair, formerly John Sinclair, from the glamor of Hollywood to Ohr Somayach yeshivah in Jerusalem.

And in some ways, the worlds are not even all that different, he mused in a recent interview at Ohr Somayach's Thornhill offices.

"Hollywood is a dream factory. Judaism sees those dreams — but from a different perspective. Hollywood believes the purpose of life is pleasure — Judaism does too. We just define pleasure differently."

But in contrast to the glitz and impermanence of Hollywood, he describes Judaism as "transcendent and eternal."

Forty-five year old Sinclair was born and educated in England, where he began his show business career, appearing in such stage productions as John Dryden's All for Love, Ibsen's Rosmersholm and the English touring company of Hair.

In the United States, besides more stage work, he appeared in, among other efforts, Moonlighting and Days of Our Lives on television and movies X, Y and Zee and Half Moon Street.

He was also involved in writing and producing music, including the cult classic The Rocky Horror Picture Show.

So what happened?

In his mid 30s, he says, he began considering what sort of family life he wanted. "I looked around and didn't like what I saw," he remembers, referring to the Hollywood scene.

"I saw the relationships in my friends' marriages, and I couldn't see myself in one of those."

Rabbi Yaakov Sinclair

Having come from a traditional, although not an Orthodox family ("The shul I didn't want to go to had to be Orthodox"), he began gradually to attend shul regularly and to study Torah.

Natural progression

"I asked my father where my tefillen were, so he went out and bought me a pair."

It was all a natural progression, he says. "I went to shul on Shabbat, so why not during the week. I went to Mincha, so why not Maariv too. And since my father had bought me new tefillen, I had to wear them."

He says he felt he was at a crossroads in his life. "I had to understand. I didn't want to [make major decisions] out of ignorance."

Finally he realized that he had to learn more intensively, and went to Ohr Somayach in Jerusalem. "I thought it was the best place for me, and best all around."

The plan was for him to stay for six months, and then go back to finish the play he was working on.

Instead, he stayed and continued studying. Five years ago he got married, and he and his Argentinian-born wife Vanina now have three children.

Last summer, he got smicha, rabbinic ordination, and now spends his time teaching and studying.

"I don't miss a thing," he says, adding with a twinkle "well, maybe sushi."

His family has been very supportive of his new life, says Rabbi Sinclair. His one-time friends in the entertainment world, who he recognizes no longer share his values, had drifted away anyway. "They probably just figure I haven't been working recently!"

One of the problems of being a performer, the rabbi says, is that "you surrender part of your own identity to the audience. You rely on the outside world to define your essence."

He considers that a dangerous way to exist.

"The need for adulation is no less a kind of addiction than alcohol or drugs — it's just more subtle.

"Those who lose their fame show the same symptoms as a person getting off drugs."

But not him.

Rabbi Sinclair considers himself a contented man.

"Why shouldn't I be? I'm living an idyllic existence. I live in Jerusalem. I learn and teach Torah. There is nothing better than that."

His visit to Toronto was part of a North American tour, which also included lectures in Montreal, Miami, Chicago and Cleveland.

Zundel seeks new audiences in U.S.

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Ernst Zundel is at it again.

The Toronto-based Holocaust denier is once again attempting to peddle his wares to unsuspecting American television stations. And like one year ago, he's having only limited success.

Finger Lakes Television in Canandaigua, N.Y., about 50 kilometres south of Rochester, recently pulled the Zundel-produced show Voice of Freedom after it had aired several times.

Viewers complained to the community-access station about its contents. Station volunteers then determined they were not obliged to air programs provided by Canadians, said Lawrence Fine, executive director of the Jewish Community Federation of Greater Rochester (JCFGR).

Days later, Zundel travelled to Canandaigua and staged a public demonstration on City Hall steps.

Members of the Jewish community and others held a counter-demonstration, said Shelly Shapiro, director of Holocaust Survivors & Friends Education Centre. One counter-demonstrator, a German woman whose handicapped niece was murdered by the Nazis, shouted down Zundel's claims that he spoke for the German people.

Zundel still plans to ask eight public-access stations in upstate New York to air his program. One of his local supporters, Jack Wikoff, has said he will sue an Auburn television station to force it to put the show on the air, Shapiro said.

Fine said the JCFGR is "trying to explore what are the limitations to public-access television." He has contacted U.S. anti-racist groups like the Anti-Defamation League to seek their advice.

In addition, Canadian Jewish Congress is providing information about Zundel and his previous unsuccessful efforts to broadcast his show in the United States, Congress spokesperson Bernie Farber said.

Last year a station in El Paso, Tex., pulled the Voice of Freedom after station management met with representatives of the local Jewish community and of the Roman Catholic, Episcopal and Protestant churches.

The community leaders were disturbed by the program, which suggested Auschwitz was more of a recreation centre than a death camp, and which claimed the Holocaust was an invention of world Jewry.

Earlier, the Voice of Freedom was pulled off the air by two U.S. satellite broadcasters, Showcase America and Keystone Communications, when they were given information about Zundel and his neo-Nazi affiliations.

Fine said the Canandaigua station reaches a relatively small audience. If the station decides to resume airing the show, it is unlikely the JCFGR will attempt to counter it by airing its own program.

"I have some discomfort presenting material to [oppose] what he has on, because it implies there are two sides," Fine said. "There are no two sides. There is fact and then there is falsehood."

CJN Purim Contest

For our Purim contest, we are asking children in elementary schools to let their imaginations run loose through the pageantry and the drama of the story of Purim. In particular we are looking for the brightest, most colorful and evocative pictures drawn with markers, crayons, or colored pencils.

Who can enter: Children from grades 1 - 6 inclusive are eligible. The children of CJN employees are not eligible.

Prizes: The judges will choose one picture from two different contestants from each grade. These "winning" pictures will be published in The CJN Purim issue. In addition, each of the 12 children whose drawings have been selected will receive a gift certificate worth approximately $25.00 from one of our favorite stores.

How to enter: Children may submit as many pictures as they want. However, the pictures should not be smaller than 5" x 7". You can draw on any paper you wish, but keep in mind we are looking for pictures which will show bright colors well and which we will be able to photograph for publication. You may use only markers, crayons or pencils. And you can give them a title if you want to as well.

You may mail or deliver your pictures to: CJN Community Contests, The Canadian Jewish News, 10 Gateway Blvd., Suite 420, Don Mills, Ontario, M3C 3A1 If you want us to return the pictures to you, please provide a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Otherwise, we will be unable to do so.
The contest closes at 5:00 pm on February 28, 1995.

The children whose pictures are chosen will be notified by telephone before the start of the Shabbat on Friday, March 3, 1995. Winning pictures will be published in The CJN of March 16, 1995.

Any litigation respecting the conduct and awarding of a prize in this contest may be submitted to the Regie des Loteries et courses du Quebec.

Network zeroes in on intermarriage

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — At the recent Jewish Students' Network convention, a panel discussed intermarriage.

Representatives of the Reconstructionist, Reform and Orthodox communities presented different views on the topic, 52 Per Cent and Rising! Is the Answer Education or Accommodation?

Reconstructionist rabbinical student Fred Dobb surprised those in the audience when he said the intermarriage rate among North American Jews has been exaggerated. He added that many non-Jews are actually making a valuable contribution to synagogue life and are raising their children as Jews.

Dobb, who is studying at the Reconstructionist seminary in Philadelphia, cited a report by American Jewish demographer Steven Cohen in the December issue of Moment magazine that the rate today in the United States is actually 41 per cent, not the oft-quoted 52 per cent from a 1990 study. As well, Cohen writes that non-Jews are converting to Judaism at a 3 to 1 ratio to Jews who adopt another faith.

Intermarriage, Dobb said, "must be accepted as a fact of life" and the only way to eradicate it is a return to the shtetl. Therefore, he argued, the most realistic approach is to reach out to interfaith couples and encourage them to participate in Jewish life.

'Good way of rallying people'

Jewish community leaders, he said, are sounding the alarm over intermarriage because "a crisis is a good way of rallying people."

The problem, he said, is not non-Jews, but rather "none Jews," that is, born Jews with little identity as such. "Today, everyone is a Jew by choice, not only converts."

Co-panelist Arna Poupko, an Orthodox rebbetzin and Judaica consultant to Montreal's Federation CJA, countered that accommodation is the worst course for Judaism to take on the "huge, tragic issue" of intermarriage.

Jews should not seek to make their religion more attractive to "the masses" but rather develop a "core" of true believers who can influence other Jews to greater spirituality, she said.

From a practical perspective, she contended that community funds are better spent on fostering Jewish identity among Jewish families, rather than the intermarried. "The statistics show that outreach has no measurable effect on the children [of intermarriages] ... As a Jewish educator, I have to ask where can I get more bang for my buck."

She warned that altering the basic ideals of Judaism to suit modernity would "undermine" it.

Third panelist Rabbi David Goldberg, assistant rabbi of Temple Emanu-El-Beth Sholom, said there will never be 100 per cent of Jews marrying Jews. The only reasonable course for the community is prevention, but, after the fact, most Reform congregations feel it is better to welcome the intermarried rather than shun them. In this way, there is also a chance that the children will have an opportunity to learn about their Jewish heritage.

The question that remains is to what extent non-Jews can participate in worship and synagogue boards or committees, he said.

Rabbi Goldberg allowed that he does not approve of his own congregation's policy permitting its rabbis to officiate at the weddings of interfaith couples.

"The couple is usually asked to promise to establish a Jewish home and raise the children as Jews. But there's a contradiction: how can you have a Jewish home with a non-Jew in it?"

Himel to speak at CHAT lecture

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

Martin Himel

TORONTO — Martin Himel, Tel Aviv bureau chief for Baton Broadcasting, will return to his educational roots later this month at an event co-sponsored by the CHAT Alumni Association and Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University (CFHU), New Leadership division.

Himel, an alumnus of both the Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto (CHAT) and the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, will discuss Israel at Peace: Reality or Another Mid-East Mirage? on Feb. 27, 7:45 p.m., at Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue.

A native of Toronto, Himel graduated from CHAT in 1975, and completed a BA in Economics and International Relations at the Hebrew University in 1978. He worked as a story editor for CTV's Canada AM before making aliyah in 1980.

In Himel's current position, and prior to that, as CTV's Middle East correspondent and Jerusalem bureau chief (1983 to 1993), he has had a prime vantage point to witness ongoing political developments in the area.

Himel is one of many former students of CHAT who have gone on to attend the Hebrew University, said Marla Rosenfeld, chair of the CHAT Alumni Association.

Tickets for Himel's lecture start at $10 for adults, or $6 for students. For more information call the CHAT Alumni office at 416-636-4755 or CFHU at 416-485-8000.

Housing deal signed

[Cont'd. from page 1]

"We'll continue to build there," he said, referring to greater Jerusalem. "We'll be there forever. And we will reinforce our presence there."

Continuing in that vein, Ben-Eliezer said Jerusalem is united, and Israel will never relinquish the city, "although it's written [in the Oslo accord] that everything is negotiable."

Ben-Eliezer, who was formerly chair of the Knesset's foreign affairs and security committee, said there exists in Israel "a very wide consensus" that Jerusalem should remain Israel's indivisible capital.

Ben-Eliezer's advisor, Chaim Fialkoff, said in an interview that his boss is "a staunch advocate" of expanding Jerusalem's present boundaries so that places like Maale Adumim, Givat Zeev and Betar can be included within its perimeters.

Fialkoff said construction of some of the previously announced 2,700 units will begin within several months, and be completed within a few years.

As a result, the Jewish population of greater Jerusalem will increase by some 20 per cent.

In an interview, Ben-Eliezer suggested the government has no intention of building additional apartments elsewhere in Judea and Samaria. "Three thousand units now stand empty," he said.

At a ceremony in Toronto, Ben-Eliezer and David Dingwall, the federal minister of public works, signed a memorandum of understanding which formalizes arrangements to exchange information on housing technology, mortgage markets, housing for the elderly and research issues.

According to Fialkoff, it is the first agreement of its kind between Israel and Canada.

After expressing enthusiasm about the accord, Ben-Eliezer paid tribute to Dingwall, whom he originally met in Israel last summer. As he put it: "He's a real friend of Israel, one of the best ministers you have."

In an interview following his brief address, Ben-Eliezer said he concurs with a recent statement by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that settlements in the territories "add nothing, absolutely nothing, to Israel's security."

However, he pointed out without elaborating, some settlements are "more important than others."

Turning to the current Middle East peace process, Ben-Eliezer exuded optimism about its outcome. He called it an "historic opportunity" to end Israel's long conflict with its Arab neighbors.

Ben-Eliezer said Israel's currently deadlocked talks with the PLO will eventually succeed, once all the security problems are solved to Israel's satisfaction.

"[Yasser] Arafat has to show he's in control," said Ben-Eliezer in an indirect reference to the PLO chief's inability so far to contain Palestinian terrorism.

Arafat capable of cracking down on terrorism: Ben-Eliezer

Ben-Eliezer said he's convinced that Arafat is capable of cracking down on terrorism, without touching off a Palestinian civil war.

Peace talks with Syria are frozen for now, he conceded. But Ben-Eliezer voiced optimism about the possibility of a diplomatic breakthrough later this year, especially if the United States intervenes.

Syria, he observed, has a national interest in making peace with Israel. An agreement with Syria, he predicted, would "open the door" for Israeli talks with Lebanon, the Gulf States and Arab countries in North Africa.

A former commander of Israeli forces in southern Lebanon, Ben-Eliezer said he opposes the idea of enlarging Israel's self-declared security zone there.

The current tension in southern Lebanon, he said, can only be defused with Syrian acquiescence.

Ben-Eliezer visited the United States before flying on to Canada. He discussed the peace process with officials and politicians in Washington, and addressed the National Association of Homebuilders in Houston, Texas. There, he met with former U.S. president George Bush.

Consul general nominated for Toronto

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

SAN FRANCISCO — Veteran diplomat Jehudi Kinar has been nominated by the Israeli Foreign Ministry as the new consul general for Toronto and Western Canada.

Pending cabinet approval, Kinar, 53, will likely assume the post sometime in the late summer.

A 25-year-veteran of Israel's Foreign Ministry, Kinar is currently consul general in San Francisco and the Pacific Northwest. His responsibilities include the Monterey Peninsula north to Washington, Idaho, Montana and Alaska, the largest area for an Israeli consul general in the United States.

Kinar visited Canada in July 1991 when he served as director of the ministry's World Jewish Affairs Department. During a Toronto visit he met with community leaders, including representatives of Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith.

A native of the Netherlands, Kinar made aliyah to Israel in 1969. He joined the Foreign Ministry the next year, and served in the consular office in the Hague from 1976 to 1981. From 1982 to 1983 he was deputy director of the information division of the Foreign Ministry in Israel.

From 1983 to 1988 he was posted as consul and minister-consul in Bonn, then served dually as director of the Europe Department of Foreign Affairs and as director of the World Jewish Affairs section.

Jehudi Kinar

In 1993 he was posted to San Francisco and will serve there until he is recalled to Israel for preparation for his Canadian assignment.

Reached by telephone in Maryland, where he was attending a conference of U.S.-based Israeli consul generals, Kinar said he was impressed with the city of Toronto and its Jewish community. "I knew the place and when the job was offered, I gladly took it."

Kinar has two children, son Yaron, 21, who is completing army service, and daughter Yael, 17, and wife Ruti.

As consul general, Kinar's duties include economic affairs, meeting with politicians and diplomats, liaising with the Jewish community and dealing with the media.

Departing Consul General Dror Zeigerman said he will be leaving in the summer after three years in Toronto. Appointed by onetime Foreign Minister David Levy, Zeigerman is a former Likud Knesset member.

He said that on his return to Israel, "I hope to be involved in business and politics.

"Israel is my home. I was here in Toronto and it was a very good experience. I'm looking forward to returning to my home in Israel."

Soviet family life focus of school play

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The trials and triumphs of a Jewish family in the Soviet Union will be told in song, dance and drama in the annual production of Beth Jacob High School.

Voices in the Silence; the true epic of a Jewish family in Communist Russia will be presented in the Beth Jacob High School Auditorium, 410 Lawrence Ave. W. on Feb. 12 and 13 at 8 p.m. Women and girls are invited to attend.

The production is completely organized and produced by students at the school, including props, costumes, scenery, choreography, music and direction. A real attempt is made to involve the whole student body.

Tickets, at $12 and $25, are available at Negev Book Store and Israel's Judaica.

Kahane calls for Arab expulsion from Israel

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Recent incidents of Islamic terrorism are pushing Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin closer to the views held by Kach and Kahane Chai, a spokesperson for the movements asserted recently.

Rabbi Binyamin Kahane, son of Kach founder Rabbi Meir Kahane, pointed to Rabin's recent support for walling off Palestinians from Israel after the Jan. 22 Beit Lid bombings.

"My solution is the same as Rabin's," Rabbi Kahane asserted. "Rabin is speaking for the first time about separation. My idea is to put the Arabs in their 22 states. That will be the only way to stop the bloodshed in Israel."

Rabbi Kahane was in Toronto recently to address supporters and seek their financial and moral support. His Toronto engagement was the only Canadian stop on his two-week North American visit.

'We're talking about a separation of two nations'

Speaking to The CJN prior to his public address, Rabbi Kahane stressed he was not a spokesperson for any particular organization, since both Kach and Kahane Chai have been outlawed by the Israeli government as terrorist organizations. Instead, he said, he was speaking for his father's ideology.

Unlike his late father, a firebrand and a powerful speaker, Rabbi Binyamin Kahane brings the message of expulsion in softspoken tones. He looks more like a gaunt yeshiva student disturbed from his studies than the leader of a radical political movement bent on expelling almost two million Arabs from Israel.

"I see a change among people. People who couldn't think about supporting us say, 'You're right,' " the 28-year-old said.

Kahane showed emotion only when asked if singling out Palestinians for transfer would be racist.

"I'm not a racist," he asserted. "We're talking about a separation of two nations. They're killing us. A separation in this kind of situation is normal. I have nothing against Arabs as Arabs. I have a lot against Arabs as enemies who want to wipe me out. At least I'll expel them out of my country."

Rabbi Kahane said the Clinton administration's recent decision to treat Kach and Kahane Chai as terrorist organizations on par with Hamas and Islamic Jihad was a way of exacting peace process concessions from the Rabin government.

"Rabin sees us as the real opposition to the peace process," he said. "I believe Rabin has an agreement with Clinton that if the United States puts us on the terror list, he will give up something in the peace process."

Rabbi Kahane predicted that with increased Palestinian terrorism and with the possibility of Israeli withdrawal from the territories, Israelis' anger will boil over onto the street.

"There could be a civil war in Israel over withdrawal. I think there are many people in Judea, Samaria and Gaza who are not willing to leave their homes at any price."

Clarification

A report in the Dec. 22 issue of The CJN regarding an anonymous $300,000 donation to the United Jewish Appeal was incorrect. The donation will be spread over three years and will finance a program of services to abused women not in shelters.

Shendy's Swim School

Eric Shendelman has been in the field of aquatics for 12 years. He has also done extensive work in camping, with 15 years' experience including positions as a program director and section head. Water safety, he insists, is vital; so, as he puts it, he "brings aquatics to camp". A well-trained staff in this field, he says, makes his school successful.

Shendy's instructors are in a three-to-one ratio to students. Shendelman says there are two keys to the child's learning success: personal attention to the student; and treating the parents as partners. Therefore, his instructors are always approachable, both to parents and children.

There are courses both in fitness and competitive swimming, though the emphasis is on fitness and water safety. Also, there are swimming programs for adults.

Instructors are experienced, with Red Cross and Royal Lifesaving certificates. The school offers regular staff training updates, including summer camp recertification courses for all camp staff, and also trains instructors for other camps and schools. Advanced leadership courses include Red Cross and Royal Lifesaving. Instructors' courses, National Life Guard Award, CPR, aquatic emergency care and Bronze courses.

Shendy's Swim School is a commercial member of the Ontario Camping Association. For more information, please call Eric Shendelman at (416) 784-0900.

Teachers set to discuss professional development

TORONTO — Two prominent Jewish educators, Dr. Jay B. Stern of Washington, D.C., and Rabbi Manuel Gold of New York City, will address over 400 teachers from 22 Toronto-area schools on Feb. 19.

The two will be the keynote speakers at the annual professional development day for teachers in supplementary schools affiliated with the Toronto Board of Jewish Education (BJE).

The program will take place at Temple Sinai, 210 Wilson Avenue, from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Jewish content sessions will deal with the Book of Genesis, Passover, the Siddur, Jewish values, Hebrew language, and Jewish history. Presenters will include rabbis Baruch Frydman-Kohl, Michael Dolgin, Michael Stroh and Ellen Nemhauser, as well as Dr. Aaron Nussbaum, Rabbi Irwin E. Witty and Mark Charendoff.

Methodology and "how to" sessions will also be offered.

A "Spark Shop" will feature teacher-made materials such as worksheets, games, charts, audio-visual materials, lesson plans and other resources developed in classrooms. They will be on display for teachers to examine and reproduce for use in their own classes.

It is hoped that the creativity of these materials will encourage a greater degree of sharing between teachers and contribute to improved Jewish education activity in supplementary schools.

Stern is the former superintendent of the United Hebrew Schools of Detroit and served for 20 years as principal of the Beth-El Religious School in Rochester, N.Y.

He is the author of three books on education and religion, as well as articles on educational, religious and Jewish cultural themes.

He has also written curricula for day and supplementary schools; has prepared textbooks and workbooks dealing with Jewish prayer, laws and customs, history, and Jewish belief; and has prepared several encyclopedia entries on Jewish themes.

Rabbi Manuel Gold currently serves as director of the New York City Board of Education Principals' Centre and is a consultant on the staff of both the Greater New York BJE and the New York Federation of Reform Synagogues.

The program is co-sponsored by the Toronto BJE, the Jewish Educators Assembly (CJC Ontario region) and the Reform Educators Council.

Aaron Fox

Fox(y) hockey for UCC winger

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — There aren't many NHLers who can skate, shoot, handle the puck and make things happen like Pavel Bure. So if young players have to have idols, they couldn't pick a more dynamic player than the Russian Rocket to emulate.

At least that's what Aaron Fox believes. Fox is a 15-year-old winger with Upper Canada College (UCC) Blues who puts skating and scoring at the top of his resume when it comes to on-ice hockey skills.

Fox loves the way Bure wheels and deals. He believes his game parallels that of the Rushin' Russian, albeit at a more modest level.

In 25 games with UCC, he's tallied 30 points, 12 goals and 18 assists.

At five-foot-10 and 175 pounds, Fox even parallels Bure's physical stature, although he's sure to put more meat on his bones given his young age.

At this point in his career, Fox is relying on his feistiness and agility to pave the way to college or major junior hockey and then, he hopes, on to the NHL.

UCC has one of the best hockey programs for kids his age and that was one of the prime factors in his decision to apply to the school last year.

His friend and former linemate with the Atom-aged Toronto Red Wings, Dan Tkaczuk, played at UCC last year. When he heard that Tkaczuk was on board, Fox looked into the school.

He applied last February, wrote an entrance exam and is now living on campus with Tkaczuk as his roommate.

Together with Benoit Morin, the threesome make up the creative offensive unit for the Blues.

Brent MacKay, co-coach of the varsity team, said Fox "has done fairly well. He's very offensively talented," but he still has work to do on his defensive game.

Despite being only 15, he's playing with guys up to 19 and he's found a spot on the team's very dangerous second line, MacKay said. The coach believes Fox has as good a shot as any at making it at an NCAA school.

Unlike most high school squads, the Blues travel to a lot of tournaments outside the city to play other top schools, exposing them to top-shelf competition.

Since joining the team in early December, Fox has participated in the Lawrenceville Tournament in New Jersey, in which UCC lost in the semi-finals to the eventual tournament winners, Taft. UCC won the consolation game, defeating a team from Minnesota to place third.

In January, UCC participated in an event hosted by Trinity College in Port Hope, Ont. UCC lost a 2-1 heartbreaker in the championship game to Northwood Prep, a team from Lake Placid, N.Y. that last year supplied six players to NCAA Division 1 schools.

Back at UCC, Fox plays between two and five games a week, with the school's schedule divided between the TDCAA high school league and the ISAA independent school circuit.

Coupled with all the tournament games, UCC racks up an amazing 70 games per season, a good preparation for the rigors of major junior or professional hockey.

Fox has been playing hockey since age 3. He once played centre but was switched to right wing at UCC.

His earlier experiences in the Metro Toronto Hockey League left him thinking it is a tight-checking league where "you've got to handle yourself." Now he finds the pace and speed are higher in tournament games against U.S. teams.

In a year or so he'll be eligible for the (major junior) Ontario Hockey League draft and if he's chosen, he'll have to decide whether to continue to play in Canada or the United States. "I'm leaning to the NCAA because of the college experience," he said.

Either way, Fox said "my goal in hockey is to get to the NHL. I'll do anything in my power to get there. As it gets closer and closer, I strive for it more and more."
